Bystander Hit And 2 Thugs Believed Shot In Gun Battle

Bandit Car Injures 2 More in Wild Flight After Holdup.

Six Stores Robbed Within 25 Minutes

Fusillade by Proprietors Drives 4 Off; Smoke Screen Aids Escape.

A bystander was critically wounded and two colored bandits were believed shot last night when a wild 25-minute career of robbery ended in a blaze of gunfire in a liquor store at New Jersey avenue and L street northwest.

The store was the sixth held up by the quartet in the 25 minutes.

Benjamin Chivori, 30, of 219 L street northwest, was shot in the left side of the chest when he was caught in a fusillade of fire between two bandits who had entered the store and the proprietors. At Emergency Hospital his condition was said to be critical.

Two other persons, one a young girl, were hurt in an automobile crash on Massachusetts avenue northwest during the bandits' mad dash to escape.

Customer Shot.

Chivori was a customer in the liquor store operated at New Jersey and L street by Daniel F. McCarthy and his son, Francis, both of whom were in the store when two colored men entered and flashed revolvers. They had taken $4 from the elder McCarthy when his son, concealed behind a pile of boxes, blazed away.

Apparently the bandits thought the fire came from Chivori. They turned their guns on him and shot him down. The elder McCarthy, meanwhile, produced his gun and began firing as fast as he could pull the trigger.

With Chivori lying on the floor and the store rocking to a squall of gunfire, the two bandits backed out, picked up a third who was standing as lookout, and leaped into a gray sedan. With a fourth colored man driving, they pulled away just as a police cruiser pulled up to the curb, its occupants unaware of the drama being enacted under their noses.

Smoke Screen Used.

By this time several alarms had gone out for the car and it was sighted near Massachusetts avenue and Eleventh street, going out Massachusetts, by Motorcycle Patrolman Anthony J. Caskeski, who gave chase. At Dupont Circle the bandits laid down a smoke screen, drove Caskeski off, and careened out Massachusetts avenue toward Wisconsin avenue.

In front of 2370, where Dr. Camp Stanley was celebrating his twenty-fifth wedding anniversary, a car believed to be occupied by the bandits, crashed into two parked cars, caromed off and struck a taxicab. Bouncing from the cab, it struck a roadster driven by Miss Virginia McReynolds, 20, of 3201 Connecticut avenue, and screamed on out Massachusetts avenue without stopping.

Miss McReynolds suffered a concussion of the brain and was taken to Emergency Hospital, where her condition was said to be serious. William S. Broughton, 63 of 1819 Q street northwest, a passenger in the taxicab, was taken to Emergency for treatment for bruises and lacerations.

Believed to Be in Maryland.

The bandit car, which bore Maryland tags, was believed to have continued to Wisconsin avenue and out Wisconsin into Maryland.

In the 25 minutes before the bandits walked into a hail of lead in the McCarthy store, they collected $593 from five daring holdups.

Their Thanksgiving Dinner Was Half Box of Oatmeal, So She Feels They'd Be Better Off at Christmas in Foster Home.

MRS Y IS NOT A HEARTLESS mother but a desperate one. Recently she went to the Child Welfare Department of the District Board of Public Welfare and asked that her six small children be placed in foster homes. Even this request had to be denied.

She reasoned that since she and Mr. Y could not give them food and clothing and there seemed no way they could be helped in their own home, it would be better to give them up.

Her story is typical of what is happening to the army of "unemployed employables" in the District of Columbia.

Mr. Y is a painter. When he has work he makes good money and by being thrifty has weathered many periods of unemployment. He has always been close to the margin, but until this year never had to ask help from a social agency or friends.

Three times within the past 12 months, he has had to ask welfare aid. Periods between jobs had been longer and his small savings were exhausted by illness.

Only once could he be given help. That was for just one week, but it tided him over until he got another job.

The wife became so weak she had to go to a hospital. During October Mr. Y earned only $18, and scarcely was Mrs. Y home again before he had to be hospitalized.

Mrs. Y tried in vain to get a cleaning job in an office building in order that she might work from 5 until 8 a. m. and still get home in time to send the children to school.

Failing this, she made her desperate trip to the Child Welfare Department. Her children could not be accepted, nor could they be given help in their homes. They had two employable parents.

The neighbors have been helping, but all the mother and children had to eat on Thanksgiving Day—while Mr. Y was in the hospital—was a half box of oatmeal that had been given them.

In the words of the agency which investigated, "there is no family in Washington trying harder to meet its own problems, or more worthy of help than this one."

A fund of $240 is needed. This would insure $80 a month for three months, which could be applied to rent and food for eight persons. With this amount properly administered they could all be set on their feet again, the agency believes.

Is this the family you would like to help this Christmas? If so, send your contribution to The Washington Post Christmas Fund and mark it "For the Y Family." Or drop it in the box on The Post's first floor.

Report of donations to fund, page 6.

No. 2—The Y Family

The Post today presents the second case among the 25 neediest families of the District's unemployed employables, for whom its Christmas fund will be collected. There is no relief fund for them. They are deserving cases, investigated by an agency of the Council of Social Agencies. Their need is measured in terms of money. Unless they are helped now, the amount they need later will be much larger.

French Tanks Halt Japanese At Concession

5 Supply Trucks Allowed to Pass After Parley at Consulate.

By the Associated Press.

Shanghai (Saturday), Dec. 4.—Japanese ran into difficulties in the International Settlement for the second successive day today when they attempted to move supplies through the French concession.

French authorities threw a police guard across the entrance to the concession to block five beflagged Japanese army trucks, but finally permitted them to go through.

An American Marine commander's vigorous protest yesterday against Japanese entry into his defense sector, following the bombing of a Japanese "victory" parade, brought almost immediate Japanese withdrawal.

Later the Japanese also withdrew from military occupancy of an area of some 30 blocks in the heart of the International Settlement where the bombing occurred.

Today's action by the French came as Japanese troops attempted to transport supplies from Hongkew, at

O. and one of the Nation's largest organizations, made public today a fiscal statement for the year 1936, showing total receipts and disbursements of more than $5,000,000, and a net balance of close to $1,000,000.

Mystery Malady Fatal to 10 in Babies' Ward

8 More Ill as Physicians Search for Cause of Chicago Deaths.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Dec. 3.—Dr. Herman N. Bundersen, president of the city board of health, announced today a deadly intestinal malady had struck the infants' ward at St. Elizabeth's Hospital. Ten babies have died within the past few days and eight more are ill, he said.

Dr. Bundersen said the hospital was co-operating fully in efforts to stem the outbreak, the type and source of which he said was undetermined. The hospital closed the nursery, in which there were 20 babies, and declined to take obstetrical cases, he said.

Infants remaining in the hospital were taken from the nursery and isolated individually.

Dr. Richard H. Jaffee, chief pathologist of the Cook County Hospital, who performed two autopsies, reported he wanted to study his findings further. There appeared to be a violent inflammation of the intestinal tract, wit hdeath following within a few hours, he said.

"Everybody is working very hard," Mother Superior Adolphine said, "to find the source of the infection and to stamp it out. We have not been very successful thus far, but I believe it is letting up."

Dr. Francis Dulak, a member of the board of health and chief of the hospital staff, also expressed the belief "we have the outbreak in hand."

Dr. Bundesen, in describing the malady said, "it seems to be a very acute, virulent inflammation of the intestinal tract, with intense toxemia (poisoning) with death usually ensuing within 24 hours.

Wives Watch 2 Air Derby Fliers Killed

(Pictures, pages 3 and 18.)

By the United Press.

Miami, Fla., Dec. 3.—Two noted speed fliers, Rudy Kling, 30, of Lamont, Ill., and Frank Haines, 28, of Detroit, crashed to death today in the thirteenth event on the opening day's program of Miami's tenth annual all-American air maneuvers.

Kling, winner of the 1937 Thompson Trophy race at Cleveland, and Hines, flying planes of special design, were rounding the first turn in a 30-mile race when they crashed to the ground north of Municipal Airport.

Caught in Down-Draft.

Kling and Haines were bunched closely with the six other competitors in the race when the crash occurred. The mass moved toward the first pylon and, as they were banking, Kling and Haines appeared to have been caught in a down-draft of air.

Both planes spun out of control and struck the ground about 150 yards apart almost simultaneously. Haines' ship burst into flames Klings plane did not burn, but he and Haines both were dead by the time ground crews reached the scene of the crash.

Kling's wife and young son and Haines' wife all were sitting in the same field box and witnessed the accident.

Rusty Heard, of Miami, who was in the race with Kling and Haines, said he was directly behind them when they crashed. Heard said he saw something drop from Kling's plane, the ship wobbled and appeared to hesitate a moment, and then plummeted nose-down to the ground.

Heard said Haines' ship was directly behind Kling and was caught in his prop wash, throwing the plane out of control. Haines' plane appeared to wobble to earth, crashing on one wing.

Flew "Mystery Plane."

Haines was flying his "Haines Mystery Plane," which he built himself and which was powered by the motor used by the late Jimmie Weddell, noted speed flier, in the ship in which Weddell crashed to his death near New Orleans two years ago.

Kling was using a "Kling Talkers" which was capable of 325 miles an hour. Before the race, Kling told officials his plane was capable of doing better than that, but it was not known how fast either was traveling at the time of the crash.

The crashes occurred in the tenth

By the Associated Press.

Lockport, Ill., Dec. 3.—Five men carrying sawed-off shotguns and machine guns executed a daring postal robbery today to escape with a $24,800 pay roll after shooting a postal clerk and abducting the chief of police.

The robbery occurred as cash mailed to the First National Bank of Lockport, to meet the pay roll of one of the Texas company's largest oil refineries, was being carried into the Lockport postoffice.

Police Chief Fred Lindner, who was ejected from the robbers' truck after they had carried him a half-mile, said the gang threatened his life and fired twice to frighten him.

Coalitionist Plan Talked To Bar Slump

'Traditional' Democrats, Republicans Confer With Douglas.

A. F. L. to Ask Congress to Fix Wages, Hours by U. S. Statute.

Business and Labor.

Tentative discussion of a political coalition to speed recovery marked a private luncheon of Senators addressed by Lewis Douglas.

Forebodings of industrial depression were expressed at a roundtable conference here of economists, labor leaders and Government officials.

Coalition Plan Studied.

Discussion of a tentative coalition program for recovery, with a keynote stressing "reassurance to the country and reassurance quickly," yesterday marked a private luncheon of a group of nine conservative or traditional Democrats and two Republicans.

All were Senators except Lewis W. Douglas, former director of the budget under President Roosevelt, whose presence added to the potential political and economic significance of the affair. Douglas, splitting with the President, has been an intellectual leader of the anti-New Deal wing within the Democratic Party.

Others present were Senators Carter Glass, of Virginia; Royal S. Copeland, of New York; William King, of Utah; Walter F. George, of Georgia; Ellison D. Smith, of South Carolina; Josiah W. Bailey, of North Carolina; Frederick Van Nuys, of Indiana, all Democrats, and Arthur H. Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, and John G. Townsend, jr. (Republican), of Delaware.

Serious Slump Feared.

A feature of the discussion, it was said later, was an apparent meeting of minds on the belief that a serious condition economically confronted the country which only swift steps can alleviate. With this ran the assumption that if an upward business trend is not restored,

Vargas Dissolves Political Parties; 'Green Shirts' Hit

Rio De Janeiro, Dec. 3 (U.P.).—President Getulio Vargas, his 24-day corporate dictatorship still in the formative stage, today decreed dissolution of all political parties in Brazil.

The disbandment order added a further totalitarian tinge to the regime inaugurated November 10, when a new constitution was promulgated and federal, state and municipal legislative bodies dissolved. The order affected chiefly the powerful Intelligent Party, green-shirted Fascist organization, only political group in a national sense besides the outlawed Communist Party. It claimed 2,000,000 members.

Oswald Jacoby Fails to Qualify In Bridge Match

Oswald Jacoby, one of the ablest and best known bridge players in the country, failed last night to place among the qualifiers in the National Contract Bridge Tournament being played at the Shoreham Hotel.

It was the first time in his bridge-playing that the noted contract expert, winner of the Vanderbilt trophy, which is to bridge what the America's Cup is to yachting, has missed placing at least near the top in a major tournament.

Teamed with B. J. Becker of Philadelphia; M. D. Maier and W. von Sedtwitz, of New York, all top ranking players, Jacoby finished fourteenth, just one place out of the qualifying flight, with a score of 35 match points out of a possible 75.

Jacoby, according to experts watching the contest, was "off form." Aware that he was not "right," Jacoby predicted his defeat in a radio broadcast last evening.

Crop Curtailment Bill Spells National Suicide, Borah Warns in Senate

By Sidney Olson.

As doubt was cast in the Senate on eligibility of Nathan Straus for his post as United State Housing Authority administrator, House leaders, across the Capitol, planned last night to jerk the private housing bill out of committee and push it to passage next week.

Basis of an expected attack on qualifications of Straus, it was learned, may rest on his reputed ownership of a 100-foot strip of stores along his Hillside Homes project in New York's Bronx, fronting on the Boston Post road. Straus declared again yesterday, however, that he has resigned his corporation posts and divested himself of all holdings and interests.

In the House, party chieftains, anxious for action before the wages-hours bill ties up the chamber after December 13, planned to expedite hearings on the housing bill to early conclusion next week, in order to get the measure to the floor immediately upon disposition of the farm bill.

Republicans Outraged.

Republican members of the committee, although generally favoring the housing bill, if modified, were outraged at news of Democratic strategy to cut short hearings.

Representative Jesse P. Wolcott (Republican), Michigan, declared "it's physically impossible to conclude hearings on this bill next week," adding: "Chairman Eccles of the Reserve Board will appear again Monday, FHA Administrator McDonald is due for further questioning Tuesday, and then at least a few of the opponents of the bill should be heard—and there are plenty of them."

Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (Republican), Michigan, refused again last night o indicate extent or nature of his letter to the Senate Labor Committee which questions Straus' eligibility for his job. Vandenberg said:

"I make my case in my letter. It's up to the committee to decide whether to take action."

Officer Is Injured Seriously by Auto

Detective Sergt. Michael J. Dowd, 41, was struck and injured seriously by an automobile late yesterday as he stepped from the curb at Tenth and F streets northwest.

At Casualty Hospital physicians said he had suffered a possible skull fracture, cuts and bruises. They added he had regained consciousness and probably will recover.

Dowd was on his way to an assignment in a downtown hotel at the time of the accident. Mrs. J. E. Brown, of Arlington, Va., driver of the car, was arrested on a charge of reckless driving. Dowd has been a member of the force for 18 years.

Infected Gum Cuts Roosevelt Vacation Short

By the Associated Press.

Miami, Fla., Dec. 3.—President Roosevelt notified temporary White House headquarters here today that because of slow healing of his infected gum he was cutting his Southern trip short and would return to Washington Monday in order to get proper treatment.

Officials said the President's general health was excellent, but Mr. Roosevelt evidently felt he should return to Washington to get the dental treatment he was obtaining before he left the White House November 27.

The President's message said the yacht Potomac would leave the Dry Tortugas Islands, some 300 miles southwest of here, tomorrow afternoon and arrive in Miami around 2 p. m. Sunday.

Will Use Special Train.

He will leave by special train a half hour later.

He will eliminate his scheduled visits to Warm Springs and Gainesville, Ga., but promised to make these visits some time later.

The President first noticed the aching tooth the night of November 15. He lost sleep that night, and next morning Capt. Ross T. McIntire, naval physician, and Lieut. Comdr. Arthur H. Yando, naval dentist, were called in.

The condition was accompanied by a slight temperature, which hung on for several days, but never exceeded normal by more than one degree. At one time the President's jaw was swollen to the size of a grapefruit, an aide said. Dr. McIntire is aboard the Potomac, but the naval dentist remained in Washington.

Due Here Monday Night.

The President now will reach Washington Monday evening. He was to have landed here Monday under the original plans for his vacation.

Another message from the Potomac late today said the President and his seven fishing companions trolled again this afternoon.

New Deal Investigated Hoover Income Tax, Professor Claims

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 3.—Prof. William Starr Myers, of Princeton University, said today he was "authorized to say that the present (Roosevelt) Administration has investigated the income tax returns of Herbert Hoover for three weeks to try and get something on him."

He did not say what he meant by "authorized."

"Think of that!" he said. "Investigating the income tax returns of a former President of the United States."

The economist after his address at Town Hall said:

"Some three or four years ago the income tax of Herbert Hoover was investigated. It has come to a pretty pass when the income tax of an ex-President should be subject to investigation."

In his speech, he advocated disfranchisement of all on relief and suggested that "what we should do is go back to the Hoover plan of relief. Nobody starved then, and they would not now."

The intelligence office of the Internal Revenue Department here said it did not know of any investigation of Hoover.

Hoover's secretary, Lawrence Richey, said:

"Mr. Hoover has not been annoyed and has no complaint to make."

By the Associated Press.

A Treasury spokesman, replying to charges of Prof. William Starr Myers that former President Hoover's tax returns had been investigated, said last night: "The Treasury never investigates income tax returns for political purposes."

Idahoan Assails Right of Wallace to Fix Production.

Millions Hungry, In Need, He Cries

Less Drastic Measure Treads Turbulent Road in House.

By Robert C. Albright.

The hapless Senate farm bill, already under heavy Administration fire, yesterday was raked from stem to stern by Senator William E. Borah, Idaho Republican, in a flank attack on "the philosophy of reduction of foodstuffs in the midst of hunger."

Aroused to oratorical fury, Senator Borah warned that scarcity policies would lead to "national suicide," and questioned the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to determine in advance what crops and how much a farmer should grow.

"This bill, if enacted, would accomplish two things," said the full-voiced Idahoan. "First, it would place the American farmer under complete bureaucratic control. Second, it would bring about a reduction of crops when millions are hungry and in need."

House Bill Threatened.

A less drastic farm bill in the House, meantime, was treading a rocky amendment road that threatened to postpone action deep into next week. The House tentatively limited maximum benefit payments to $7,500, and ordered benefits of more than $1,000 cut 25 per cent. The bill as reported applied the cut to payments above $2,000.

Then, in the first significant leadership triumph since the House bill came up for debate, members shouted down an amendment by Representative Gerald J. Boileau, Wisconsin Progressive, to eliminate farm referendum requirements from the bill's tobacco section.

Farm bill progress, slowed by Administration differences and open conflict between House and Senate, endangered the whole legislative program as the special session passed the half-way mark with nothing accomplished.

May Affect Housing.

Lagging House farm action may throw out of gear leadership hopes to take up a housing bill next week, and Senate farm controversy aggravated a legislative blockade already threatened by the anti-lynching bill, next Senate order of business.

Revolt against the President's recommendation for action this session to slice Federal highway authorizations spread in both houses. Chairman Pat Harrison, of the Senate Finance Committee, wired Governor White, of Mississippi, there was "no possibility" of Congress approving a cut violating a "contract obligation." Chairman Wilburn Cartwright, of the House Roads Committee, said he would not call a meeting of his committee to consider the roads message until January.

Senate Session Today.

The House adjourned until Monday, but Senate Majority Leader Barkley drove that chamber into a Saturday session. The Senate will continue to meet an hour early and adjourn late. Night sessions may be invoked later.

Borah rose to his attack in the Senate a day after Southern cotton Senators held a field day of protest against Secretary of Agri-

Love of Aged Recluse for His Dog So Great He Shelters Its Body in Bed, Denying Death

Love of an aged master for his faithful mongrel dog reached beyond the boundaries of death yesterday.

Last night at Gallinger Hospital, George Robertson, 81-year-old recluse, refused to believe that Nellie, the pet who had tagged his heels and shared his bed and board for more than 1 years, was no more.

She might, he suggested, be baying at the moon beyond the hospital windo, but she was not dead. It didn't matter what the police had said and what hospital attendants told him.

Robertson was taken into custody when he refused to let anyone enter his little room at 227 E street northwest, where he had stayed with the body of his dog, dead since Monday night.

"My dog is sick, but she's getting better," he told the roomers and Mrs. R. B. Boley, the proprietor.

Once Mrs. Boley opened the door. She saw the body of the little mongrel lying in the bed beside the old man. Its head was on the pillow. Its body was covered by blankets and only the nuzzle protruded.

Finally Mrs. Boley consulted neighbors and police were called. Robertson was sitting in a chair, with the dog still in the bed. They led the elderly man away.

Clad in a blue-striped shirt, wistful, shy an dsad, Robertson woke from his sleep at Gallinger

"I've just had a dream," he told attendants in the ward where he is held for observation. "I had a dream about my dog and she was right here."

"I'm a Georgetown man, born and bred," he said, and then he could not recall the street where he had been riased, or where he had lived, or where he had been in the produce business years ago.

Hazily he recalled the days of his youth along the towpath—the bright sun on the caaal and boys and their dogs foraging through stub pine and deep grass.

Old Robertson smiled a tired smile, then for a moment his eyes brightened.

"If Nelly really is dead, I may get married again," he sighed.

Railroads Fear Regional Drive On Rate Boost

Opposition Expected as Hearings Are Held Throughout U. S.

By the Associated Press.

R. C. Fulbright, chairman of a steering committee of shippers interested in the Interstate Commerce Commission investigation of a proposed 15 per cent increase in railroad freight rates, last night predicted chief opposition to the increase would develop in regional hearings.

So far, little opposition has been expressed here. The regional hearings will be held next month in strategically located cities throughout the country.

Fulbright indicated the opposition would be expressed against applying the rate boost to specific commodities, such as livestock, corn, cotton and coal.

Passenger Rate Boosted.

While cross-examination of rail executives was in progress, the commission announced an increase in passenger fares of all lines west of the Mississippi, which railway officials estimated would mean new income of $2,500,000 annually.

The rates will become effective in 10 days upon filing of new tariff schedules by the lines. The principal boost was in basic pullman car fares, which will go from 2 to 2½ cents a mile.

Revenue derived from the increases will be in addition to any gained under the proposed freight-rate boost and a proposed half-cent rise in Eastern passenger fares.

I. C. C. Right Questioned.

Meanwhile, representatives of the railroad commissions of six Western States challenged the right of the Interstate Commerce Commission to act on the requested freight increase, and asked that the proposal be dismissed.

They declared the railroads had not filed proper schedules or tariffs for invoking suspension powers of the I. C. C., and had not invoked the power of the commission "to prescribe commission-made rates resulting from an investigation on the commission's own motion."

Another development was the statement by the transportation committee of the United States Chamber of Commerce that "the railroads are in urgent need of substantial increase in revenues."

Bigger Rise Urged.

Cross-examination of railroad executives by attorneys representing shipping interests, developed expressions by some of the rail officials that the requested increase might not be sufficient to restore all roads to a strong financial position.

F. W. Sargent, president of the Chicago and Northwestern, said:

"The railroads should have asked for a 20 per cent increase."

Similarly S. T. Bledsoe, president of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe, declared an increase in traffic as well as a rise in rates would be necessary to produce sufficient revenue for his line.

W. C. McCullough, attorney representing Pacific Northwest shipping interests, inquired how much of an increase above the 15 per cent would be needed to produce necessary income at the present traffic level, but Sargent said he preferred not to make an estimate.

Questioned on Effect.

Commissioners Clyde B. Atchison and Claude R. Porter questioned F. E. Williamson, president of the New York Central, with regard to the effect of the proposed half-cent rise in Eastern passenger fares.

Porter traced the volume of passenger traffic back to the early 1920, and related it directly to the amount of fares charged. He said that after an increase at that time, passenger travel began a decline in volume which continued until 1935, when the commission ordered a fare cut.

He questioned Williamson as to whether the tide of travel volume had turned after this action, and Williamson said that it had, but declared it was his belief the result of the present increase request would be more income for the railroads.

Difference Explained.

Porter also pressed for an explanation of why Eastern lines, which he said had the greater traffic density, operated with higher rates than Western roads. Williamson replied by saying Eastern lines depend chiefly upon short-haul traffic while Western lines derive much of their income from long-haul travel.

Both Sargent and Hale Holden, president of the Southern Pacific, discussed the influence of truck competition on railroad income. Holden said that in some cases the truckers, as well as competing water carriers, were in as bad financial condition as the railroads.

The time is coming soon, Sargeant said, When regulations must be imposed on the trucking industry.

Law Violations Charged to TVA

Chattanooga, Tenn., Dec. 3 (AP).—Testimony by expert technicians that the Tennessee Valley Authority unified system was designed "primarily for power production" was the spearhead of a private utility company attack on the Authority before a three-judge Federal court today.

Albert S. Crane, consulting engineer, of New York, asserted that in stressing power development, "directors of the Authority are not carrying out the TVA program in accordance with the law."

"In my opinion the TVA system was built primarily for power," he added.

Philip Sporn, Brooklyn, N. Y., chief engineer for the Appalachian Electric Power Co., the Kentucky & West Virginia Power Co., and Kingsport Utilities, testified his companies were able to serve present and future power demands of their territories.

Roosevelt Plan to Reduce Highway Spending May Save Railroads by Cutting Competition.

By Franklyn Waltman

WALTMAN.

THERE is one aspect of President Roosevelt's proposal to reduce the Federal outlay for highway building that apparently has been generally overlooked. The proposal has almost universally been interpreted as an economy move. It is that. But it is more. It is a retreat by the Federal Government from competing with private enterprise.

At first glance that might not be clear, unless one casts an eye toward the hearing room of the Interstate Commerce Commission where the railroads of the country are desperately seeking to stave off bankruptcy by getting authority for an increase in their freight rates.

There can be no doubt that the railroads are in a critical condition—perhaps the most critical of their existence. Their need is for more net revenue—and the need is urgent. They are seeking more net revenue through increased rates. Granting their requests will save them, at least temporarily—but whether it will prove to be of lasting benefit, unless many other things are done, is problematical.

In the present instance, the need of the railroads is so urgent, their costs of operation have been so materially increased, chiefly through boosts in wages, that an increase in freight rates should be granted. The Interstate Commerce Commission in its October rate decision indicated as much.

But increasing the price of a commodity or service is not the wisest approach in the long run toward placing an industry or a transportation system on a sound operating basis. Net revenue may be increased by two other methods, namely, reducing costs, or increasing the volume. How far the railroads can go in reducing costs is controversial. Plans for eliminating waste through consolidation came to naught because Congress insisted that the railroads not reduce their labor force. Labor, direct and indirect, is the big factor in railroad operation and those costs cannot under the framework of Government regulations recently set up be easily pared.

It is not intended here to say that railroad efficiency and economy could not be greatly improved. It could be if it were possible for a railroad co-ordinator to make effective measures which the railroad managers concede to be wise. But that is a long struggle in which little progress has been made, due to political resistance, geographical jealousies, power of labor unions and reluctance of investors to recognize the obsolescence of capital which has taken place long ago.

So for the immediate future the methods open to the railroads for increasing net income are increased rates or increased volume. Increased rates may have the effect of decreasing volume. About that none can be dogmatic. If that happens, then the railroads will be worse off than they are now.

As for the other alternative, the railroads for many years could rely on the growth of the country to increase their volume. But that was when waterways offered the only competition to rail transportation. It is not a coincidence that the railroads have suffered severe hardships ever since the mass production of the automobile commenced immediately after the World War. It is a case of cause and effect, each playing its part in an econcmic and technological development.

The popularity of the automobile created a demand for good roads, until now there is hardly a State which is not groaning under the financial weight of maintaining huge highway systems stretching literally everywhere. Along with these improved highways came the truck—a severe affliction for the railroads. The truck took volume away from the railroads in the days of prosperity and it continued to do so with greater rapidity—due to cheaper costs—in the days of depression. When recovery made its appearance, much of the business lost in the previous years remained with the truck.

Thus we find, for instance, that the index for industrial production for the first nine months of 1929 was 122, with the 1923-25 average equaling 100. The index figure for carloadings during that period was 108. For the first nine months of this year, the industrial production figure was 116 and the index figure for carloadings was 80. It is clear that the progress of the railroads during the recovery period has not kept pace with recovery in industrial production.

During the depression, in an effort to stimulate employment, the Federal Government doubled its financial aid to States for highway building. Indeed, through annual emergency appropriations it tripled and quadrupled in some States its former contributions. This action temporarily helped the railroads, for it created a traffic volume for them.

But in the long run it injured the railroads, since they were being taxed by the Federal Government to build highways for future competitors. For, every time the Federal Government spends $100,000,000 for highways it is injuring the railroads by creating an instrument to reduce their volume. It is an indirect form of Government competition, since the Federal Treasury is subsidizing trucks and buses, just as much as it does when it lends cheap money to municipalities to develop power plants in competition with private companies.

Mr. Roosevelt does not mean to abandon Federal aid to the States for highways. He only wants to restore it to the pre-depression figure. In doing that he has moved not alone to save the Treasury money but also to brighten in a small way the future of the railroads. In a dark room any gleam of light virtually amounts to brightness.

Straus Draws Fire; Housing Hearings Sped

Leaders Press for Passage in House Ahead of Wage Battle.

Yorker has been the target for an unprecedented number of attacks. Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia, of New York, refused to attend a housing conference on thhe ground that Straus was "star-gazing" instead of "settling down to work." John L. Lewis, chairman of the Committee for Industrial Organization, assailed Straus on much the same basis. Thursday, when Langdon Post, head of the New York Housing Authority, defended the Federal program and Straus, LaGuardia immediately named Lester B. Stone, one of his secretaries, to the authority.

Behind assaults on the dapper housing chief apparently lies his participation in Hillside Homes. Straus inherited from his grandfather a wide tract of land in the Bronx. In 1934 he became interested in low-cost housing as a means of increasing value of the property and as a philanthropic gesture.

He applied for a loan from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to build a block of 1,415 apartments on the land, fronting on the Boston post road. He received subsequently a $5,060,000 maximum loan, representing 80 per cent of the total cost, from PWA, on a first mortgage which still is outstanding. Straus, as was required under the law, put up the remaining 20 per cent.

One of Only Seven Loans.

Five hundred applications were made for this type of loan, under which limited dividend corporations were set up, with sponsors required to guarantee that only nominal rents would be charged, but only seven were granted. Straus' Hillside Homes, after months of consideration and negotiation, was one of the seven.

The United States housing act of last session gave the President authority to transfer all housing assets of PWA, including the housing division and thus including the Hillside Homes loan, to the U. S. H. A.

The act also gives the U. S. H. A. administrator authority to amend contracts under which limited dividend corporations were set up, with the idea of reducing interest rates.

Might Cut Own Interest.

Under this, it may be contended, Straus the administrator may now reduce the interest rate paid by Straus the individual housing philanthropist. Straus declared yesterday, however, he had divested himself of all interests two weeks before coming to Washington to take oath of office.

Contention also centers around the fact that, while the Hillside Homes project originally was planned to front on the Boston Post road, somehow plans were changed. Straus now owns personally a 100-foot strip along the Post road, on which has been erected a business section of store units, with 27 stores planned to serve tenants of the housing project.

When, in the 1934 New York gubernatorial campaign, the Republican candidate, Robert P. Moses, denounced this in unsparing terms, Straus did not specifically deny the store-front charge, contenting himself with the remark that "Moses will be in the limelight for the next ten days and is entifled to some fun."

Moses Charged Big Profit.

Moses said then:

"Is it not true that the Straus family was stuck with this land, could not dispose of it, and that it brought in nothing, that it was sold to the Limited Dividend Co. at a price in excess of what it could possibly bring in the market, that the price paid was over twice the assessed valuation just fixed by the city for tax purposes for the following year?

"You know there was plenty of land to be obtained for the assessed valuation. I bought playground land for the city on this basis in every borough. The difference meant about $200,000 to Mr. Straus."

Straus could not be reached last night for comment. It was believed he may prefer to await decision of the Senate Labor Committee's Tuesday meeting, when his confirmation will be the session's business. Senator Elbert D. Thomas (Democrat), Utah, chairman, pressed for details of the Vandenberg allegations, said: "Tuesday will tell."

Speaker William B. Bankhead said: "I am very hopeful that the housing bill can be reported out of the committee to the floor and passed sometime next week."

Wallace Urges Action.

At Senate hearings yesterday Secretary of Agriculture Wallace urged enactment of the President's proposals. Recovery in housing activity, he said, would "do more than any one thing to spur employment and restore the purchasing power of farm products."

"If anything can be done to increase the industrial pay roll in a sound way, it will benefit the farmer greatly," Wallace declared.

Proposed interest on Government-insured home-building loans concerned the House Committee hearing where Eccles testified.

"If lower cost than 5 per cent is to be expected," Eccles said, "it can not be done, it seems to me, unless some form of subsidy is given to the borrower. I' mnot advocating that I'm merely pointing out what seems to be an obvious situation."

If the interest rate on insured home mortgages were lowered to 3 or 3½ per cent, Eccles said, it might result in funds going into the Government's baby bonds, instead of home construction. The baby bonds, he pointed out, pay 2 to 2.9 per cent interest and have tax-free features.

'Sunny Rice Fields of the Bronx' Are Heard From at Last—Via Bruce Barton.

"SUNNY RICE FIELDS OF THE BRONX" will ask New York Democrats, "Why are we always the ones elected to foot the bill?", Representative Bruce Barton warned colleagues yesterday in his maiden speech since he was elected last month.

This "murmuring" as to pushing the cost of living "always higher and higher" will also come from "the cotton fields of Brooklyn, the rolling wheat fields of Manhattan, the warm tobacco fields of Harlem," the advertising man, author and Republican predicted in the course of a speech on the farm bill.

He said a new member might be pardoned for the "uncomfortable feeling" that the only groups of importance in this country are farmers and labor. Of the middle class, once termed the "backbone" of the nation, he said:

"The idea seems to be that the Nation has lost its backbone or needs no backbone. This, I think, is an unsound assumption. The middle class is long suffering and slow to anger, but it's beginning now to stir."

SENATOR GUY GILLETTE (Democrat), Iowa, said he would be "very proud" to receive the Democratic nomination for Senator in 1938.

He said in a statement that "newspapermen keep calling to my attention persistently circulated rumors in Iowa that I will not be a candidate for renomination to the Senate and ask me to comment on these rumors.

"These rumors have no basis or foundation in any action taken by me or statements made by me. I was honored by the Democratic Party by being selected as their candidate for the unexpired term of Senator Louis Murphy in 1936."

A SUBCOMMITTEE was named by the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee to study a proposal to investigate automobile distribution.

Hearings will be held on a resolution introduced by Representative Withrow (Progressive), Wisconsin, demanding an inquiry by the Federal Trade Commission. The measure charged unfair and unestical practices by manufacturers to compel retailers to "force the market."

Snodgrass Given Royal Society Title

Robert E. Snodgrass, Department of Agriculture entomologist, has been elected an honorary fellow in the Royal Entomolog'cal Society of London, the department announced yesterday. He is the third American to be so honored in recent years and is one of only 12 honorary members, all elected for their contributions to the scientific study of insects.

Snodgrass was elected because of his extensive research on the comparative anatomy of insects making it possible to establish many important relationships among various insect groups.

Green, Lewis Finish Parley; NoPlanDrafted

Will Report Results of the 2-Day Parley to Full Committees.

By the Associated Press.

John L. Lewis and William Green ended their face-to-face peace conference last night, announcing they had reached no conclusion or recommendation for a united labor movement.

The two emerged from the conference room separately.

The American Federation of Labor president said he and Lewis and their two aides, comprising a special subcommittee, would report the results of their two days of negotiations to the full negotiating committees on December 21.

Green and George M. Harrison, chief of the A. F. of L. negotiating committee, hurried away from the conference room after making the brief announcement that no conclusions had been reached.

C. I. O. Leader Lewis, and Phillip Murray, his chief strategist, stopped long enough to discuss briefly the wind-up of their conference.

Asked if the peace negotiations were left in status quo, Lewis replied, "That is a fair assumption."

It was assumed he meant the full negotiating committees would continue to seek agreement.

Lee Pressman, general counsel of the C. I. O., said yesterday he would ask the Justice Department to investigate an alleged plot to "get" Harry Bridges, director of the C. I. O. maritime activities on the Pacific Coast.

Pressman said he would turn over to Federal authorities an affidavit said to have been signed by Robert J. Bell, purporting to describe how he was offered $1,000 and a gun in Seattle and told to "get" Bridges.

AFL Abandons 30-Hour Week; To Advocate 40

New Wage Bill Worked Out by Council to Be Sent to Congress.

By the United Press.

President William Green of the American Federation of Labor announced last night the federation will recommend a wage-hour bill embodying a flat 40-cents-an-hour minimum wage and a 40-hour maximum work week.

Heretofore, the federation has advocated the 30-hour week at 40 cents an hour.

Green made his announcement after an all-day meeting with the federation executive council. He summoned the council when passage of the Black-Connery bill, now before Congress, appeared increasingly likely. He had condemned the bill, particularly a feature which would set up a five-man board to administer the act.

He said the federation's bill would provide for enforcement by the Department of Justice.

"Our opposition to the proposed five-man board," he said, "springs largely from our disappointing and distressing experience with the National Labor Relations Board."

He said the federation does not "look with favor" on an amendment offered by Chairman Mary T. Norton, of New Jersey, of the House Labor Committee, which would substitute an administrator for the five-man board and give jurisdiction to the Department of Labor.

"The measure ought to be simplified," he added.

He emphasized there would be no differential in working conditions allowed under the proposed measure according to location of industries.

He said the measure, when finally drafted, would deal with the question of overtime work and exempting certain classifications of labor, such as agriculture.

Thomas Says New Deal Saved U.S. Capitalism serious political as well as economic troubles will eventuate.

The implication was that Mr. Roosevelt could be expected to step forward once more with a program of Government controls and a new spending policy which might dwarf even the huge expenditures of the past five years.

Agree on Five Points.

Seeming agreement was reached by the luncheon guests upon these points:

Reassurance to business, workers and investors that the Government would give them a square deal on a permanent basis, not a 24-hour basis.

Immediately tax revision, with repeal or modification of the undistributed corporate profits tax and the capital gains tax.

Relaxing of "regimentation and regulation by Government.

Balancing of the budget.

Stimulation of private enterprise by Government assurance and aid.

Some thought that the new housing bill presented by Mr. Roosevelt was a step in the right direction.

Encouragement of foreign trade and of export markets for American staples.

Great Depression Feared.

Gloomy forebodings of a severe industrial depression, with 9,000,000 unemployed in January, were expressed at a round table conference of economists, labor leaders and Government officials, held at the Cosmos Club last night to discuss the present business slump. Richard W. Hogue, director of the Independent Legislative Bureau, was in the chair.

Industrial and financial monopolies, curtailment of Government spending in an effort to balance the budget, "backtracking on the policy of providing productive labor for people who need it," were among the causes assigned by various speakers to the current decline in values.

Ross Trial Near End; Argument Set for Today

Counsel Fight to Bolster Self-Defense Plea in Davidson Death.

By Edward Ryan,
A Staff Correspondent.

Stafford Courthouse, Va. Dec. 3.—Walter L. Ross, 17-year-old slayer of Elmer J. Davidson, tonight awaited a decision which may mean death or freedom, as counsel for both sides rested and retired to prepare arguments.

Court will be reconvened at 9 a. m. tomorrow, two months to the day after Davidson's body was discovered on Widewater road, a few miles from the scene of the trial.

In his instructions tomorrow, Judge Frederick W. Coleman will warn the jurors that if they believe Ross killed Davidson in self-defense they must return a verdict of not guilty. The instructions were prepared before court was adjourned today.

Defense Plea Pressed.

On three fronts, Frank P. Moncure, defense counsel, fighting the first major legal battle of his career, struggled to establish that Ross killed Davidson in self-defense after the latter, angered by Ross' refusal to accept improper advances, attacked the youth.

Moncure called two Virginia psychiatrists to testify as to the behavior of morally degenerate persons. Dr. J. S. DeJarnette, superintendent of the Weston State Hospital Asylum at Staunton, Va., and George B. Arnold, superintendent of the State Colony of Epileptics, told the jury degenerates would use force on a proposed victim.

Moncure sought to break down the allegedly voluntary confession Ross signed in the Alexandria police station October 26 admitting that he accepted Davidson's advances and then killed him for refusing to pay more money. The confession was introduced yesterday by Prosecuting Attorney W. W. Butzner.

C. W. Shaw, associate defense counsel, testified that on the afternoon the confession was written and signed he and Walter J. Ross, the youth's father, had been kept waiting to see Ross for three hours. He said Sergt. E. J. McDermott, of the Virginia State police, and Lieut. Edgar Simms, of the Alexandria police, refused him admittance to Ross after both had seen a court order from Justice Coleman directing that the attorney and the father be permitted to talk with the youth.

His testimony came after Judge Coleman, reversing an earlier decision, permitted the defense to present as evidence Ross' first written confession, signed at Quantico the day after his arrest. This earlier confession coincided with Ross' verbal story of how he killed Davidson, told on the witness stand yesterday.

Under questioning by Moncure, Simms and McDermott insisted Ross had not been forced or starved into writing the Alexandria confession.

Denies Force Was Used.

Simms said that after Harry Klotzman, Baltimore pawnbroker, identified Ross at the Alexandria police headquarters as the man who sold Davidson's watch in his shop, "I took Ross upstairs to clear up certain points in the crime, particularly the stab wound in Davidson's back and theft of watch."

"I didn't dictate any part of his statement, except to ask him to include the place and time of the confession, and that it was voluntary," Simms testified. "I warned him of his right not to say anything he didn't want to.

"Ross was not starved into signing the confession. Besides the regular meals served in the station—four sandwiches and two cups of coffee a day—Ross was brought extra meals which he paid for."

Simms admitted Shaw had been kept waiting while the confession was being written. He denied he saw Judge Coleman's order.

McDermott explained that when Shaw presented the order, he had not recognized him as an attorney. "The newspapers had been trying to locate Ross, and we were being careful," he insisted.

Cleveland, Dec. 3 (AP).—Rudy A. Kling, wiry 29-year-old garage mechanic from Lemont, Ill., won two major events of the National Air Races here in September.

He whipped his cream-colored "Jupiter" across the finish line in the 200-mile Thompson Trophy race at an average speed of 256.910 miles an hour—second best in Thompson history.

The day before he won the 150-mile Greve Trophy race in the sleek racing craft of his own design.

New York, Dec. 3 (AP).—Eleanor Holm Jarrett, swishing about in a clinging white negligee, today described the charges brought against her by her divorce-seeking husband, Arthur Jarrett, as "so childish I wouldn't even talk about them."

Reminded that she had said in Denver she was going to marry Billy Rose, Miss Holm snapped, "I did not!"

Carrel Predicts Longer Life by Slowing 'Clock'

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 3.—Dr. Alexis Carrel, Rockefeller Institute scientist, today forecast a new step toward longer human life, by regulating "inner time," a human clock whose hours are set by the blood and tissues.

Dr. Carrel spoke to the annual convention of the Association of Life Insurance Presidents. He proposed a new kind of scientific institute, to study the process of aging.

"The problem of longevity," he said, "is entering a new period of its history. So far increase in duration of life has resulted from hygiene and medicine. But these have nearly completed their work.

"Further lengthening of human existence will demand a new method. True prolongation will require improvement of the quality of tissues and blood. That is, more resistance to the body wearing out."

This will be done by discovering how to regulate what Dr. Carrel named "inner time," also called the "physiological clock," by which some persons of 40 are really as old as others of 60.

The hands of this clock are the blood, its works the tissues, its mainspring perhaps the mind. Its hours are age, and these have different lengths in different persons.

That one of these hours can last indefinitely, perhaps forever, has been demonstrated at the Rockefeller Institute. Dr. Carrel said a colony of tissue cells—that is, a bit of living flesh separated from the body—will live in a drop of serum. Left alone, the cells soon show signs of growing old. But if the waste products of the cells are not allowed to accumulate, "senescence and death are indefinitely postponed."

A bit of chicken embryo, taken from a heart in 1912, washed every few days ever since, is still growing as actively as 25 years ago at the institute.

the eastern end of the International Settlement, through the settlement and the French concession at Nantao, to the south.

Tanks and a line of soldiers and police were stationed shoulder to shoulder across the entrance to the French Bund, but the French finally let the Japanese pass after a hurried conference at the French consulate.

The incident followed a day and night of tension after the bombing of the "victory" parade.

Japanese had drawn a cordon of bayonets around the 30-block area in the International Settlement after a Chinese student tossed a hand grenade at the "victory" march of 6,000 Japanese warriors as it passed down busy Nanking road.

The explosion wounded three Japanese soldiers, a Japanese policeman and a British police inspector. The grenade thrower was shot dead by a Chinese constable of the Settlement police as he turned to flee.

Another Chinese died. As the Japanese, after several moments of near panic, reformed to resume the parade, this man, evidently in a patriotic frenzy, hurled himself from a tall building on Nanking road. His body crashed into a barbed wire entanglement.

American Fights Eight.

During the near-panic a 75-year-old American, Vaughan Read, had a fist fight with several Japanese who he said molested him. Read said that eight Japanese took part in the scuffle, that he knocked one officer cold and that he was beaten although not seriously hurt. A British accountant, E. T. Maitland, had to be protected by Settlement police from angry Japanese after he broke the staff of a small Japanese flag.

When Col. Charles F. B. Price, commanding the Fourth Marine Regiment, learned that the cordon penetrated three blocks into the American sector he hurried to the scene.

Paris Deputies Vote Increase In Army Budget

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Dec. 3.—While France's foreign minister sought a new way to peace in eastern Europe, the Chamber of Deputies today unanimously voted an increased army budget for 1938, and urged the government to strengthen frontier defenses.

The chamber voted the army budget credits of 7,932,878,285 francs (about $264,500,000), an increase of 1,381,505,231 francs (about $46,050,174) over this year's appropriations. Up for the chamber's approval is an extraordinary army budget of more than 5,550,000,000 francs (about $185,000,000), an increase of 1,136,500,000 francs (about $37,880,000.)

Rejects Red Proposal.

Edouard Daladier, minister of national defense, rejected as "impossible" a Communist proposal to reduce the two-year conscription term. He told the chamber 387,000 French soldiers face 1,000,000 men on the German frontier and 300,000 on the Italian border in the southeast.

Foreign Minister Yvon Delbos was soupding out France's allies in eastern and central Europe on the possibilities of a general European settlement to which Germany and Italy would adhere.

Defenses Bolstered.

During debate on strengthening the Swiss border, Daladier said France had spent $1,650,000 on authorized defenses.

The Versailles Treaty demilitarized the Franco-Swiss frontier, but Daladier assured Parliament the government had adequate troops and equipment in the sector.

He declared, however, France would take no unilateral action to fortify the area illegally despite the temptation, "after so many violations of treaties."

Doctors Shorten Children's Legs In New Operation

New Orleans, Dec. 3 (AP).—An operation to control the growth of leg bones of children suffering from infantile paralysis and restore them to normal activity was announced today before the Southern Medical Association.

The operation, reported by Dr. J. Warren White and Dr. W. P. Warner, jr., of Greenville, S. C., consists of chiseling out cores of bone from the leg at the knee. It stops the growth of these long bones in children who have had one leg shortened by infantile paralysis. Instead of attempting to lengthen the short leg the surgeons prevent the longer leg from growing so that the two will be equal in length when growth stops.

Twenty-nine children who would otherwise have been crippled for life have been restored by the operation, Dr. White said.

Panchen Lama, Tibet's 'Living Buddha,' Dead In Exile, India Hears; 3,000,000 Left Rulerless

By the Associated Press.

Shanghai, Dec. 3.—Reports reached here by way of India today that the Panchen Lama, the living Buddha of Tibet, died November 30 in exile at Jyekunda, western China.

His death left the mysterious "forbidden land" without either of the Grand Lamas who exercised a divided spiritual and temporal absolutism over the mid-Asiatic country of 3,000,000 people.

The Panchen Lama, worshiped as a reincarnation of Buddha himself, was exiled by the Dalai Lama, Tibet's supreme temporal lord, in 1924. Each Grand Lama must certify to the reincarnation of the other in a man-child born at the time of his death; but because of his exile, the Panchen Lama was unable to recognize the new Dalai Lama when the latest reincarnation died in December, 1933.

Since that time the Panchen Lama had been attempting to return to Tibet and had been reported seeking to merge the two lamaships in himself. His return to Lhassa, the forbidden city, was blocked, however, by orthodox Tibetans who resented his reformist tendencies.

Priests of the Yellow Hat sect—the reformed Buddhists who recognize the Dalai Lama as spiritual as well as temporal ruler—continued their search for his reborn successor. This baby was reported found last July but there was never confirmation.

The exiled Panchen Lama, a huge man who always wore a bright yellow robe and high leather boots, was 54 years old. He had attempted to bring educational and administrative reforms to the strange country of towering mountains, where one-fifth of the population are priests.

The Panchen Lama adopted western fashions in his exile, insisting on shaking hands and riding about in expensive, American-made automobiles.

Tibet is under nominal Chinese sovereignty although practically independent since the Dalai Lama who died in 1933, led a revolt in 1912. He had been deposed by the Chinese emperor in 1910 and fled to British India with Chinese troops in pursuit.

British authorities refused his plea for intervention but allowed him to remain in India, from where he led his march on Lhassa, defeat-

Two Ford Strikes Due Next Week, C.I.O. Announces

St. Louis, Dec. 3 (AP).—Richard Frankensteen, international vice president of the C. I. O. United Automobile Workers of America, declared here tonight "in al probability strikes will be called next week at the Kansas City and Long Beach, Calif., plants" of the Ford Motor Co.

He asserted the Long Beach workers "voted unanimously" for the strike. "At Kansas City," he continued, "soup kitchens have already been set up and the various committees are ready for the call."

He told a mass meeting of C. I. O. workers the Ford strike in St. Louis, now in its second week, "is part of a carefully planned national campaign to organize Ford."

Insurgents Smash Government Line

Hendaye, Franco-Spanish Frontier, Dec. 3 (U.P.).—A day-long artillery bombardment, followed by a hand-to-hand battle, today smashed one of the loyalists' most heavily fortified positions on the upper Aragon front, insurgent frontier dispatches reported.

Before dawn Generalissimo Francisco Franco's heavy artillery, drawn up north of Sabinanigo to the east of his Jaca base, began hammering the loyalists' concrete line of fortifications around Olivan.

Large holes were ripped in the government line, for weeks a threat to Franco's Jaca-Huesca communications, and loyalist defenders were reported to have retreated.

Post Yuletide Funds Gladden Needy T Family

Money Starts Coming in to Aid More Desperate Cases in Capital.

The T family has cause to be much happier today. Since its story appeared as Case No. 1 of the 25 neediest families to be helped with The Post Christmas Fund, the telephone has been ringing—and the money has started coming in.

Dickie will have his glasses. An optical company and two of the city's optometrists each made the offer. He will get a complete examination and the special glasses he needs.

In addition, a fund of $111 has come in for this and other needy families. The T family's Christmas prospects look brighter.

Delicate Point Raised.

Several groups of persons have called The Post desiring the name of a family they could help. This raises a delicate point. The cases being presented are not relief clients. Their embarrassment is great enough, or they never would have gone to the welfare agency for help. To spread their names would make it greater.

Cannot these groups forego any satisfaction that working directly with a family might give them, and permit their money to be expended through welfare agencies which have trained social workers and know the background of the case?

Money given to The Post fund can be designated for any of the 25 families. For instance, if a club or group of employes wishes to contribute as a body, the Y Family presented today can be selected. But the money should be spent by the agency that knows what the family needs.

Better Economics.

This, we believe, is the most constructive way to reach the neediest cases in Washington this Christmas. It is believed that the amount stipulated as needed by a family will set it on its feet again. This is better economics, the persons who have made welfare a lifelong study declare, than it would be to single the family out for a Christmas visit from individuals who take their gifts in person.

Contributions to The Post fund yesterday included:

Hoover His Target.

The Idahoan, in his onslaught against "the philosophy of reduction," called former President Hoover "the author of that doctrine."

"He was the first man," said Borah, "not only in the history of the United States but in the history of the world to propose a scarcity as a remedy for economic ills, while the whole world for 3,000 years has been inventing machinery and applying itself in every way to produce more and more in order that the human family might live in ordinary decency."

Majority Leader Barkley interrupted Borah to ask him what his own plan was for "handling this."

Borah Gives Own Plan.

Borah replied he would not interfere with production, but would have the Government, where it was necessary, take the surplus off the market and separate it from domestic use. He said a certificate could be issued to the farmer for the amount of the surplus. If the surplus was used to feed the needy in lieu of monetary Federal relief, as he proposed, Borah said the Government would have to buy the surplus.

"We can take these surpluses, outside of cotton, and deal with them effectively for $1,000,000,000 a year, and let those get them who need them. Instead of that, shall we pay $1,000,000,000 a year for the reduction of that which they need?"

He said that all the acres now in use, and about 23,000,000 more, would be needed, "if people have what they ought to have for a decent standard of living."

Challenges Legality.

Borah particularly challenged constitutionality of proposed acreage allotment provisions of the Senate bill, and said that if the principle were followed up by the Government, it "could fix the amount of production of everything that might be considered ultimately likely to move in interstate commerce."

"We may say to the shoe manufacturer of Massachusetts, in advance of cutting leather, how many shoes he may manufacture," he added.

Senator A. J. Ellender (Democrat), Louisiana, said the bill's principles were "no different" from those in the existing soil conservation act, and it was only when marketing time came that the Secretary could interfere.

"I do not think one unconstitutional measure justifies another," snapped Borah.

He said compulsion was provided throughout the Senate bill by, "fixing the amount which a farmer may devote to these acreages, following it up by a provision that if he does not do certain things the Government withdraws all support, all loans, soil conservation payments and everything else."

Pope Suports Bill.

Shortly after Borah's speech, his Idaho colleague, Senator James P. Pope (Democrat), too to the radio to assert that corn and wheat production control features of the bill were "entirely voluntary," and that the bill provided no "radical departure." He declared:

"Those who are antagonistic to agricultural relief talk of regimenting the farmer and controlling his activities, but, as a matter of fact, under the pending bill the farmers are simply given an opportunity to sign a contract by which they would reduce production to a point where a reasonable relationship with market demands is maintained."

Referendum Stays.

In the House, Boileau, who, on Thursday, succeeded in writing a far-reaching diary protection amendment into the House bill, failed in his effort to strike out provisions for a two-thirds farm referendum vote before quotas could be applied.

Boileau said the referendum plan was "contrary to the Democratic form of government," and "Congress should assume its responsibility of voting for or against the bill and not discharge its responsibility by providing that it shall not be made effective if one-third of the particular farmers sought to be controlled disapproves."

The House also rejected an amendment by Representative Clare E. Hoffman (Republican), of Michigan, to tighten and safeguard farm referendum machinery.

Chairman Marvin Jones, of the House Agriculture Committee, was seeking a compromise on the Boileau dairy amendment. He said the compromise would be designed to assure dairymen the program would not increase their competition, without having the broad implications of the original amendment.

Edgerton Faces Sub-Committee Hearing Today

Senate Judiciary Group Speeds Study; Group Fight Looms.

A sub-committee of the Senate Judiciary Committee this morning will examine Prof. Henry W. Edgerton, Cornell University law professor, to determine whether they believe him a fit appointee to the United States Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

Prof. Edgerton, who was summoned Thursday by Senator Burke (Democrat), of Nebraska, chairman of the sub-committee, to appear next week, turned up unexpectedly yesterday. Senator Burke thereupon scheduled a hearing for 10:30 a. m. today.

There was some doubt last night as to whether the hearing will be open or closed, but Senator Burke indicated it will be open. Other members of the sub-committee are Senators Borah (Republican), of Idaho, and Van Nuys (Democrat), of Indiana.

The Edgerton case, which began as an apparently innocent inquiry based on an article written by the professor in the Cornell Law Quarterly, yesterday showed signs of taking on aspects of a sequel to the Supreme Court reform fight and the nomination of Senator Black to the court as well.

All three members of the sub-committee were stanch foes of the President's court bill, and Senator Burke frequently has criticized the haste with which the Senate confirmed Justice Black without hearings.

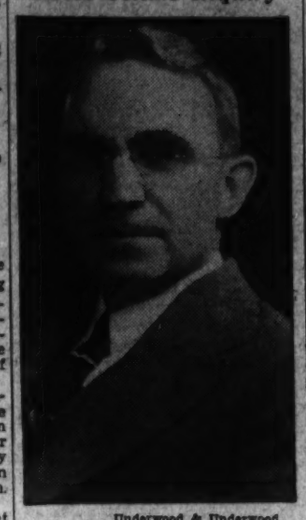
The chief question to be answered by Prof. Edgerton, it appeared yesterday, will be whether or not he believes the Supreme Court has usurped the authority to review acts of Congress, as contended by the liberals.

While Prof. Edgerton was clearly critical of decisions of the court, prior to the New Deal, which he did not discuss in the article, the Senators on the sub-committee indicated their interest was confined to the legal question of the nominee's opinion of the court's authority.

Regardless of the recommendation of the sub-committee and subsequently the full Judiciary Committee, the Edgerton case has already revived cloakroom discussions that portend a spirited debate on the court before the Senate acts on the confirmation.

Meanwhile D. Lawrence Groner, senior justice on the bench of the United States Court of Appeals here, was confirmed as chief justice of that court by the Senate. Justice Groner will take the place of the former Chief Justice George Martin, who has retired after many years on the apppellate bench.

Faces Senate Inquiry



Underwood & Underwood.

PROF. HENRY W. EDGERTON, of Cornell University and formerly of the antitrust division of the Department of Justice, has been asked to appear before the Senate Judiciary Committee for questioning. He was appointed a member of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia by President Roosevelt.

Black Legion's Chief, Wanted Year, Gives Up

Effinger, Ohioan, Walked Out of Hearing in August, 1936.

By the Associated Press.

Lima, Ohio, Dec. 3.—Virgil F. Effinger, reputed head of the Black Legion wanted in Michigan on a criminal syndicalism charge, surrendered here today after a search of more than a year for him.

The portly former contractor who walked out of an extradition hearing at Columbus August 25, 1936, was arrested at his home here.

Effinger first surrendered a year and a half ago when he heard Michigan authorities had issued warrants for his arrest. He appeared in Columbus for an extradition hearing before a secretary to Gov. Martin L. Davey. Michigan authorities obtained a fugitive warant from a Columbus municipal court but then were unable to find Effinger.

He was reported seen entering an automobile. His home was watched for months.

Nearly 50 Black Legion members were convicted in Michigan in a State investigation of the hooded secret order. Murder, arson, conspiracy to kill and other chrages were made by authorities against the organization.

Somebody around these parts is too rich for his own good.

He's got $1,000 which Goochland County, Va., police would like very much to get their hands on. In fact, Sheriff Joel Powers, of Goochland, yesterday asked Washington police to help look for this $1,000 which was stolen several days ago from a Goochland citizen.

The trouble is, it's all in one piece. And when its present possessor endeavors to spend a $1,000 bill, the ensuing hue and cry is likely to land him forthwith in the toils of the law.

Imagine having $1,000 you can't spend!

Bishop Freeman Continues Series

The Right Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., LL. D., Bishop of Washington, will continue his series of Advent sermons on "Times for Remeasuring" at the choral evensong service in the newly opened Crossing and North Transept of Washington Cathedral tomorrow afternoon at 4 o'clock. The sermon at the celebration of the Holy Communion will be delivered by the dean, the Very Rev. Noble C. Powell, D. D. Music for both of these services will be rendered by the Cathedral Choir of men and boys under the direction of Robert Barrow, who will be at the new console of the great organ which is now being installed in the Cathedral. One unit of the new organ and the two portions of the organ formerly used in the Great Choir have been connected with the console now placed in its permanent position in the second bay from the crossing.

Kennedy Promises Ship Building Plan

By the Associated Press.

A Congressional committee heard yesterday the Maritime Commission hoped to complete a permanent subsidy program for the American Merchant Marine within 30 days.

Joseph P. Kennedy, commission chairman told the House Merchant Marine Committee that the major obstacle to accomplishment of this aim was inability of private shipping interests to make definite commitments on replacement of obsolete ships.

Seventy-five ships, he said, are needed now to replace obsolete units, 85 per cent of which will be 20 years old within five years.

Gael Simson, one of the Forest Service's technical men (he developed the portable radio for forest fire-fighters, came to town yesterday, his technical papers in a trim brief case in technical order, no doubt. Someone said that Simson should be interviewed; his work in the radio field is important, and, it was said, he probably could bring it to earth, make it understandable on paper.

Simson didn't look so much like a technical man, that is, the popular picture of the technical man. He looked more like a forest ranger with his tanned face and he talked easily, smoking one cigar after another. "How much of an interview do you want; about two sticks?" he asked.

"And whose paper did you used to work on?" he was asked.

"I worked on the Tygh Valley Bee, in Oregon," he said. "I wrote the editorials and the news stories and I ran the hand press. I stay away from newspaper offices now. I won't even go near the Press Club for fear I might get into it all over again" he said.

Then he opened a pamphlet, with a battleship gray cover, titled "Fire Control Notes," and showed his portable radios. "I feel like the salesman of portable typewriters every time I open this," he said. He started telling what radio had brought to forest fire-fighting, particularly the portable radio that weighs no more than 9 pounds and carried for set-up from crucial hot-spot to hot-spot by the smoke chasers, as he called them.

His discoveries in this field have fairly revolutionized fire-fighting, drawn the fighting lines closer and saved hundreds of thousands of dollars in national trees. "That reminds me of a story," said the Forest Service technical man.

* * * *

"These little radios have performed some peculiar service out there," he said. There was, it seems, the forest ranger whose preserves were deep in the wild. He came to civilization infrequently, but kept in touch with things through his portable set. One night a message came through, asking him to locate a man apparently lost in the forests. The ranger set out next day and found the man, dead.

Rites Memorized.

The ranger radioed this intelligence to his station. The family of the dead man was contacted. They wanted him buried where he had fallen; but requested that some sort of Christian service be conducted. It was impossible to get a clergyman to the spot. And under the circumstances, the words of a burial service were radioed the ranger, who memorized it, as best he could, and then stood there in the lonely cathedral of the trees, reciting over the dead.

Less morbid is a tale from Alaska. The sheriff, constable, catchpoll or whatever they call the peace officer in an Alaskan town, was roused from his dreaming by the courthouse stove to learn that a murder had been committed in a distant precinct. The sheriff (we will call him) rushed to his portable radio set and talked to an individual who had a radio set-up in the region where the foul deed had been committed. The sheriff, through the medium of ether waves, declared his listener to be a deputy, without benefit of badge perhaps, but at least with a figurative portfolio.

"Seize the offender," said the sheriff, "and hold him until I, the law, arrives." Thus was the villain captured and brought to dour justice.

He told of how the victim of an acute appendix was saved through those portable radio calls and then said: "If you never heard of Uncle Sam's sea-going foresters you don't know the most interesting people who work for Uncle Sam." Indeed, they are a hearty crew, who can say, at intervals, that they like the sailor, are home from the sea and in the next breath they go home to the forested hills.

These are the rangers who tend the forests off southeastern Alaska, the forests that lie abreast the waters that hatch the storms for this country. To get from one forest to another they have to use the open waterways of the Alaskan Gulf. They sail any distance from a few miles to 700 miles over seas that bounce like cuss words. They man and captain the boats, which number eight now, and upon alighting ashore they have to know the forests just as well as they know the so recent sea, for the forests at times can be as cruel.

It is to apologize to you Mr. Simson, for dwelling altogther on the stories you told and on the human interest that is you, yourself. In the Government they call you a technical man, a radio engineer, to be precise, but you're no technical man in anything but accomplishment. You're the sort of man we'd like to sit around a fire with where you could unwind some more yarns (which you undoubtedly own) and maybe dream a few on the burning coals.

(He leaves shortly for Portland, Oreg., where he is stationed in an experimental laboratory.)

Britain's New Broom.

Showing the same energy, fertility of mind and lack of respect for hide-bound traditions which he displayed with such good effect as minister of transport, Leslie Hore-Belisha, Britain's new war secretary, is giving the British army a thorough shake-up.

According to many British military experts, that job has long needed doing. At the end of the World War Great Britain, like other belligerents, had a vast reserve of seasoned veterans she could call on. But that situation has changed with the passage of time. Recently, in the face of an international situation embodying a real threat to Britain's security, the kingdom has found its defense system inadequate.

In the past two years much progress has been made in building up Britain's naval power and its air arm. Army reform and expansion have lagged behind, however. Young men have shown marked indisposition to join the colors.

Since Hore-Belisha took hold that situation has begun to change rapidly. Life in the British army has been made more attractive, to bring about a larger flow of recruits. And much obsolete practice has been cut away. Now the war minister carries reform into that sanctum sanctorum, the army council.

In a very dramatic move he has secured the resignation of all the elderly military members of that body and has replaced them by comparative youngsters, in the early fifties. Many will be shocked by his bland disregard of the glacial movement of seniority rule. But military experts, such as Liddell Hart, are enthusiastic over the changes.

A Memorial Library.

Representative Treadway of Massachusetts has moved another pawn in the long-drawn game of settling on a proper Washington memorial to Thomas Jefferson. It is not a drastic move but at least it will help to keep the Tidal Basin plan in check. Mr. Treadway proposes to rename the Library of Congress in honor of the illustrious Virginian. Moreover, he would raise a statue of Jefferson in front of the library's main entrance, while all that remains of his famous Monticello library would be placed on appropriate display inside.

Mr. Treadway estimates that his plan would cost only $35,000 as contrasted with the $3,000,000 down payment discussed for the Tidal Basin project. Important as is the factor of economy, it may not be enough to win full acceptance of the idea of changing the name of the Library of Congress, so deeply engraved by the passing years. Nevertheless, the Treadway proposal has secondary value as a reminder that the Tidal Basin scheme has not yet been scotched. Indeed, only a vote of funds from Congress would be needed to put steam shovels to work in a wholesale desecration of Potomac Park.

What is wanted first is action on a resolution introduced last year by Mr. Treadway. Reported favorably to the House, it would forbid the use of the Tidal Basin as a memorial site. With this assured, discussions of alternative plans would be desirable. In the meantime, the possibility of combining Mr. Treadway's current suggestion with the obvious need for a new central public library building for the City of Washington might well be considered.

Provocation As A Fine Art.

Viewed even superficially, Japan's "victory parade" through the International Settlement at Shanghai yesterday was an utterly uncalled for demonstration of childish gloating over a victory which has added only tarnish to that nation's reputation.

But also to be considered is the possibility that the parade was a deliberately provocative gesture designed to goad the Chinese of Shanghai into acts of hostility and afford excuse for a claim that the Settlement authorities cannot maintain order. In that way, the Japanese perhaps reckoned, they would have opportunity to extend their authority over the Settlement.

The parade was a case of deliberately throwing a match into a powder barrel. And it bears a suspicious resemblance to those totally unjustifiable night maneuvers of the Japanese troops near Peiping last July which led directly to the present undeclared war. The technique of provocation has been elaborated by the Japanese militarists into an art.

It is not surprising that foreign military and naval observers urged the conquerors to call off the parade. The Settlement authorities pointed out the illegality of the action in the territory under their control. But the Japanese were undeterred by these reasonable protests. About the only concession made to foreign opinion was officially to describe the demonstration as a transfer of troops.

The parade was held. It was only the remarkable good sense and self-restraint displayed by the Chinese that resulted in its passing off in even relatively peaceful fashion. One bomb was thrown, injuring four persons. But the culprit was hunted down and killed—by a Chinese policeman.

What the Japanese have in mind was indicated by their further action in seizing part of the defense zone held by American troops. In the face of the strong opposition of the American commanding officer this extremely dangerous situation was eased. But there is no telling, in view of the recklessness of the aggressors, when the next episode will occur. Playing with fire has become a Japanese habit. In the long run, those who indulge that habit get burned.

The N. L. R. B. And The Press.

An issue of very great importance has been raised by the National Labor Relations Board's subpena demanding that a trade magazine editor reveal the background of an article criticizing certain of its activities. The board regards this inquiry as purely incidental to its investigation of charges against the Weirton Steel Co. But it is not difficult to see that it constitutes a threat to freedom of the press.

There is no attempt, of course, to bring formal charges against the writer or publishers of the article in question. Apparently the board wishes to examine the records from which this article was written merely to determine whether or not it was influenced by officials of the steel company. The question is whether the company was using this magazine as a means of interfering with its employes in their right to organize for collective bargaining. From that viewpoint alone the action of the board may appear to be entirely reasonable.

The board's search for a conspiracy to circumvent the provisions of the national labor relations act, however, is likely to have the effect of penalizing an editor for exercising his own judgment. Any such outcome would mean a sweeping intolerable departure from the board's primary function.

The issue is sharply posed in the board's own statement: "Mr. Barclay (the subpenaed writer and editor) may print and publish anything he wants to, in any way, but if the Weirton Steel Co. uses such material as an instrument for discouraging unionization, there is an unfair labor practice." Obviously the violation of law, if there was one, consisted of the use to which this article was put and not the writing of it. The whole case seems to be built upon the circulation of a reprint of the article among the company's employes.

Very likely the article was a highly biased attempt to discredit the N. L. R. B. But that is beside the point. Freedom of the press includes the right to express even distorted opinions, and there seems to be nothing in the labor relations act to interfere with that right. If the expression of prejudices could be barred, it would not be long before all dissent from the official viewpoint would seem, to its targets, prejudiced.

It is difficult to see how the case would be changed substantially even if the board should prove that Mr. Barclay was directly influenced by steel company officials in writing his article. The law does not forbid industrial magnates to seek a channel of expression for their opinions. Such opinions may even be printed with the same impunity that is accorded to labor leaders. It is only when such influence is used to coerce or obstruct labor organization that it can be said to fall into the category of unfair practices.

Clearly, then, a hands-off policy is the only reasonable course to follow so far as the press itself is concerned. In its eagerness to uproot unfair labor practices the N. L. R. B. has gone far astray from its specific function. And continued pursuit of that policy will be likely to hurt the board far more than the resented article has done.

Shipping As An Instance.

Critics have constantly emphasized the check to business expansion resulting from heavy taxation of undistributed corporate profits. It is especially impressive, however, to have the deleterious effects of such taxation pointed out by one of the Administration's right-hand men—Joseph P. Kennedy, now chiarman of the Maritime Commission and formerly head of the S. E. C.

Mr. Kennedy's corroborative testimony was offered in the course of a House committee hearing on proposed amendments to the merchant marine act. It took the form of a recommendation that shipping companies be permitted to deposit profits up to 10 per cent in a special tax-free capital reserve fund. He explained that in most instances operators are in great need of additional working capital but under present conditions cannot attract outside investment support.

Hence, they have to fall back upon earnings to provide needed funds—a situation that makes conservative dividend policies essential. Under the present law if earnings are withheld, taxes on retained profits have to be paid.

While Mr. Kennedy made no general appeal for revision of the tax on undistributed profits, his description of the plight of the shipping industry supplies a strong argument in favor of such revision. As a depressed industry, shipping is particularly hard hit by a form of taxation that forces liberal distribution of profits which may be urgently needed in the business. But to a greater or less degree all kinds of business suffer from a tax that interferes with the exercise of sound managerial judgment in matters of dividend policy.

Labor And Laws.

Organized labor is by no means happy over the improved prospects for passage of wages and hours legislation. John L. Lewis and his C. I. O. supporters have only grudgingly indorsed the bills now under consideration in the belief that half a loaf is better than no bread at all. President Green of the A. F. of L., still smarting under the alleged unfair treatment accorded his organization by the National Labor Relations Board, strongly objects to the provisions for establishment of a five-member labor standards board. He favors a single administrator under the jurisdiction of the Department of Labor, and prefers to have the hours and wages standards written into the law instead of letting them be determined by decree.

It is evident that organized labor is conscious of the threat to independent unionism from the measure now before Congress. From the beginning spokesmen for labor have been fearful that legislative fixation of wages and hours might hamper union efforts to get better terms by independent collective bargaining. For that reason both the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O. leaders objected to the Administration's original plan to let the proposed labor standards board set standards for industries in which collective bargaining functioned ineffectively as well as for so-called substandard industries.

As a result of criticism from spokesmen for labor, especially Messrs. Green and Lewis, the wages and hours bills now under consideration are supposed to apply only to unorganized, underprivileged workers. Nevertheless, the proposed legislation would bring a large, if indeterminate, proportion of the working population of the country within the scope of a Federal regulatory system. And that would reduce the incentive to extend trade unions to hitherto unprotected fields.

There are also other reasons why organized labor may well fear the encroachment of the law upon the uncoerced activities of trade unions. However feeble a bargainer an individual man may be, he may offer competition, direct or indirect, to members of trade unions. If such a person becomes a protege of the Government, assured of certain minimum rates of pay, there is always danger that these minimum rates may become a test of the adequacy of pay in organized industries.

While awake to these possibilities, spokesmen for labor do not seem to understand the more serious though less obvious threat to a vigorous and independent trade-union movement coming from increasing reliance upon legislation. As Dr. Leo Wolman recently said, the Government and various of its agencies have "proved by all odds the most effective organizers of labor in this country."

In substantiation of this claim he cites such measures as the NRA, the Guffey coal act, the Walsh-Healey act and the WPA—all instrumentalities through which wage-raising activities have been carried on. The National Labor Relations Board has also been a positive force in stimulating organization. And now, in the wages and hours bill, we have a proposal that undertakes to secure for the unorganized benefits hitherto denied them.

At first glance Government intervention of this kind may seem to aid the cause of unionism. But this conclusion loses sight of the fact that a forced product is not as sturdy as a normal uncoerced growth. Except in those severely restricted fields where labor is definitely exploited—notably in the case of women and children—the law should be sparingly invoked. Otherwise, we may witness the disappearance of really free labor organizations and their replacement by a system of Government control over working conditions like that found in the Fascist states of Europe.

Ten Horsemen Of Death.

From the Pittsburgh Press.

Of ten big killers among the diseases that cause three out of every four American deaths, seven do their deadliest work among the poor, Miss Josephine Roche, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, told the American Public Health Association meeting in New York.

The "ten horsemen of death" are heart disease, cancer, pneumonia and influenza, cerebral hemorrhage, nephritis, tuberculosis, diabetes, diarrhea and enteritis, appendicitis and syphilis.

"From seven of these ten—all but cerebral hemorrhage, diabetes and appendicitis—the death rates mount steadily as income goes down," Miss Roche said. "The death rate from respiratory tuberculosis is seven times as great among unskilled workers as among professional workers. It is three times as great among the skilled as the professional. These seven diseases kill twice as many of the poor as of all other classes in this country."

These startling figures indicate that disease, although a scourge of all humanity, is a social problem, cutting down its victims most cruelly among "that one-third of our people, ill fed, ill housed and ill clothed." They should spur our common efforts to reduce poverty, abolish city and rural slums, and outlaw sweatshops, child labor and other industrial evils. And they should cause us to begin thinking about more effective local, State and Federal public measures to safeguard the health of those whose incomes do not allow for adequate hospitalization, medical service and preventive care.

Telegraph Monopoly.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

It seems that the Department of Justice at Washington has made an amazing discovery. At least, there is a strong suspicion in this department that Western Union and Postal companies are doing the telegraph business in this country! And the officials of these companies thought they had such a deep dark secret. You just can't get around these bright boys at Washington.

If it turns out that the department is correct in suspecting Western Union and the Postal of being in the telegraph business there must be drastic action taken pronto. We don't know just what should be done with these suspects, but it does seem that if the charges can be proved the logical thing would be to close up every Western Union and Postal office from Maine to California. That is the best way to encourage business and to solve the business depression troubles. And isn't President Roosevelt anxious to do that—as soon as he can finish the all-important job of fishing?

There are a lot of reactionaries who have an old fogey idea that the way to solve the business depression problem is to allow businessmen to make a profit. That's foolish. There is an old Spanish proverb that says, "A woman, a mule and a hickory tree. The more you beat them the better they be."

And Mr. President is going to restore prosperity by that very method. It is just bound to be a big success. W. W. PHILLIPS.

"Right Dope."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Post editorial views, nearly always sound, show an exceptional grasp of the highly intricate farm situation. You certainly have the "right dope" on this moot subject, and your logic is irrefutable.

In your editorial "Two Dangerous Farm Bills," you have stated only facts, incontrovertible facts, but alas, the Administration is not looking for facts; it is looking for votes.

Logic against lunacy is like bullets against armor plate; it doesn't even make a dent.

L. G. HIGGINS.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

"Heroes and heroines" writes a nurse of doctors, other nurses and herself. That is quite typical of the opinion doctors and nurses hold of themselves and perhaps is one reason they fall so far short of that true heroism which can be constructed only upon the firm foundation of humility. Conceit and egotism and pride can never form the foundation upon which true heroism is built.

Applause, flowers, the acclaim of the world, is what they want, those self-styled heroes and heroines. The opportunity to be of service to a pain-wracked humanity means little or nothing to them and that is why so few of them have the love and gratitude and confidence of the poor, and why the average sick person is far better off if cared for in his own home and by a real heroine—a devoted mother or wife or sister, who never thinks of herself as a heroine at all, but thinks only of what is best for him.

I have been told by a patient in a hospital that after a night of wide-awake suffering he would drop off to sleep at 3 or 4 o'clock in the morning, only to be awakened at 5 by the nurse with a little basin of water and the command to him to wash his face and hands—this in preparation for breakfast which would arrive two hours later. It is very convenient for doctors to have their patients in hospitals but it too often means cruel suffering and death to the patient.

"Down and outers," writes the same nurse of patients in Gallinger Hospital. They are "down" certainly, but why should anyone take for granted that they are "out?" Why, with proper care and sympathetic understanding, shouldn't they stage a comeback, not only in prosperity but in health as well? They could, and if they do not it is a reflection on the efficiency of the doctors and nurses responsible for their care.

The Unemployment Census.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

The generous co-operation of daily newspapers in the educational campaign covering the unemployment census proved exceedingly helpful to the Government, as well as to the many persons throughout the land interested, directly and indirectly, in the success of this undertaking.

The voluntary nature of the census made it essential to obtain a wide dissemination of information. The shortness of time, due to the necessity of getting this work out of the way before the Christmas rush in the Postoffice Department, made an intensive campaign necessary. That the educational campaign was effective is indicated by the fact that telegraphic reports from 14 typical cities show that the unemployment report cards were filled out with such accuracy that only 1 per cent required call backs. To this result daily newspapers made a major contribution.

The editorial co-operation of daily newspapers was likewise an important factor in obtaining public acceptance of the importance to the Nation of getting the basic facts of unemployment as a preliminary step in a long-range plan of re-employment.

Officially I acknowledge your part in this great public undertaking, and, personally, I thank you.

Silver Lining Suggestion.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Who, looking it over in retrospect, but will be able to say the stock market crash and business recession accompanying, were a good thing, a necessary evil?

Even the calling of this special session of Congress, now getting nowhere with great rapidity, was bred of a monumental self-sufficiency which, minus the chastening given, might have led to a reopening of the preposterous court issue.

However unpalatable the business recession—the most severe term the mandate administration will use to describe the present disturbance—may be at this time, the present recession has had some good results. It has socked the topheavy conceit out of a Governmental coterie that needed such treatment as none within memory of living man.

Best of all it has put a quietus on the old refrain: "Next year—we'll balance the budget—next year." And it has caused Governmental boards of strategy, blatantly confident of their fitness to dominate the universe, to be appraised at their true discount.

Who may claim there are no "credits" to this situation, pointing the first signs of a return to sanity and national economic health?

WALTER BAHNSEN.

Washington, Dec. 2.

Union Station's Soot.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Several times a day for several years I have had occasion to pass Union Station, beautiful, classic edifice and gateway of nations, to be disturbed by the thick covering of dirt and soot that destroy the beauty of this lovely white marble building and render it a blot upon the landscape.

The soot is now several inches deep, and has been allowed to remain until the frieze of statues is unrecognizable, and the rains have stained indelibly the marble not otherwise blotted out by dirt.

Too many times to enumerate, representattives of all nations of the world, kings, queens, diplomats, senators, as well as the ebb and flow of humanity, pass through these doors and pause to look at this building which, with its white marble neighbors, stands to represent our country, and from this they get their first impression of our Capital.

The United States Postoffice, next door, was washed a year or so ago, and still holds its cleanliness; so could not the railroad companies afford to render their lovely building under the dome of the Capitol a competitor with these other buildings which surround it?

ELAINE POWELL HEISKELL.

Oxon Hill, Md., Dec. 1.

Railroads and Trucks In Competition.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Again the railroads are before the Interstate Commerce Commission asking for a raise in both passenger and freight rates, and the probabilities are that the raise will be granted. But will it help to keep the railroads alive? Positively no, it will just ease them off into a worse condition.

What is needed by both the railroad corporations and the commission is vision. A proverb says "Where there is no vision the people perish," and the same can apply to our railroads. The railroads have been largely responsible for the upbuilding of our country. But they bought and paid for their rights-of-way, they made and paid for the making of their road beds and the laying of their rails over which to operate.

But competition of the worst kind has come in—the buses and trucks which are allowed to operate over the highways which have been built by the public. Unless this unfair competition is stopped by the Federal Government, soon the railroads will be junked, or else become the property of the Federal Government. Then the unfair competition will automatically stop. But why let it come to this? Why not leave the railroads in the hands of private corporations where they belong?

Why does not the commission quit bothering with rates, and begin to regulate the buses and trucks? What right have the bus and truck companies to take possession of the highways, which have been constructed for the benefit of the traveling public, and operate over them to make money as they are doing, just keeping their rates enough under the railroads to take the business away from the roads? And it is done with impunity, as many times the big buses and trucks "hog" the highways to the danger and against the interest of those who builded them. So why the discrimination against the railroads and the public?

If the bus and truck companies want to operate, either let them build their own highways, or let them pay as they should for using the highways which belong to the public. Some say they pay through license fees and the gasoline tax. But do they? They pay no tax and no upkeep as the railroads do on their road beds, and this and the wear and tear on the highways amounts to far more than is paid for license and gasoline. If it did not, the bus companies would, like the railroads, be asking for a raise in tariffs.

Only a short time back the passenger trains were running empty. The rates were reduced and the passenger trains were again filled up, and we found in traveling in the Middle West that the railroads claimed they were making money again out of their passenger trains, that business was good.

Raise the rates again and the traveling public will again take to the buses. For whether it is believed or not, the greater part of our population have but a limited amount of money, and they are sensibly hunting "bargains" in an effort to make it go just as far as possible. So why not both railroads and the commission have a little thought and also a little vision? D. PAUL ZIEGLER.

The Post Impressionist

The Japanese.

NOW that Representative Jenckes has suggested that the Japanese cherry trees around the Basin should be cut down, I see that the propaganda mills will soon start me, along with a few million other Americans, howling for the blood of every man, woman and child in Japan.

Before that happens, it seems that it might not be a bad idea to remind myself of the many reasons I have for liking the Japanese. My reasons for hating them are nonexistent, at present, but I don't suppose that I'll be any more invulnerable to the pressure of the press and radio than my father was when they "turned the heat on" the Germans.

* * * *

I first landed in Japan several years ago. "Landed" is the proper word, too, for although I had been awake on the dawn we pulled into Yokohama, and had seen the fishing fleet of junks putting out to sea against one of the few red sunrises of my life, I'd had no hopes of "shore leave." You see, I was looking through a porthole of the "sick bay," where I was lying with the soles burned off my feet and walking out of the question for another week, at least.

But my shipmates talked with the doctor and the first assistant engineer, and that afternoon I was piggy-backed down the gangplank and deposited in my first rikisha. From then on until we got back aboard the ship, early next morning, I learned just how fine the Japanese can be.

They treated me right. Wherever we went, I was shown the utmost consideration. I got the most comfortable chair and a stool for my bandaged feet. The rikisha boys took it easily going over the rough spots. There were always plenty of friendly arms to lift me down when we stopped to inspect some particular spot which caught our fancy. Sympathy for my plight was expressed in everything from correct American, pidgin English, the sign language and sibilant tsk-tskings.

Courtesy seemed ingrained in the Japanese. I remember the affable K. Shimokado, proprietor of a store in Kobe. Of course, it was good business for him to be polite, but he didn't have to escort us from the ship to his shop in a limousine, and then give us the run of his home behind the store once we got there.

Above, all, he didn't have to cash a check for me drawn on a small bank in an obscure United States town when he had known me only half an hour. I've spent two days trying to get a similar check cashed in cities in this country, and finally been forced to abandon the struggle.

The more I knocked about Japan, the better I liked its people. One afternoon I walked down an alley and came upon the back of a shop where "genuine" leather luggage was being manufactured.

Sitting in the sun on the edge of a small porch, I watched the workmen pasting those bags together from the flimsiest pieces of imitation leather. The workers and I got along admirably. One fellow, splendidly tattooed, posed for a photograph. The proprietor helped me split a bottle of the Japanese "Asahi" beer.

Try stopping around a New York sweatshop some time where they are turning out shoddy articles faked to look like the real thing, and see how pleasantly the boss will treat you.

* * * *

That first impression of Japan has never been replaced. I still think the Japanese one of the finest peoples on earth. You should see the way they treat their children. There's no better test than that. At that, though, it is probably a good thing that I got to know something of the behind-the-scenes Japanese before I ran foul of their military.

We were ashore in Shanghai when that happened, doing a little exploring in the Japanese section of the International Settlement. In no particular hurry, I was idling along a sidewalk when I saw a patrol of Japanese marines approaching. I stopped to watch them go by. As they drew abreast, the noncom in front struck me across the chest and knocked me down in the street. There was no word of explanation, or even a curse. They had fixed bayonet and all. I could do was grumble to my shipmates.

The whole thing didn't develop into an international incident or rate half an inch in any newspaper. They seldom do when they occur to a sailor. In fact, it never struck my mind to go and complain to the United States consul.

For a while, the knocking down rankled in my mind. Then the ship returned to Japan on the homeward-bound run. I found the people just as kindly and courteous as before, and forgot about the whole business until the trouble started a few months ago.

Somehow, I cannot connect the persons I met in Japan with those now in uniform in China. They cannot be one and the same. There are those, of course, who say that the friendly politeness is all show for the tourist. But in that case, why put it on for the sailor?

I don't think the courtesy is all show. I think it is as genuine as Fujiyama or the after effects of drinking too much "Asahi" beer. Universal courtesy is not something that can be imbued in all classes of a nation by a tourist's bureau. It is a growth of centuries. It undergoes a queer change when it crosses the Inland Sea to China in a uniform, to be sure, but I hope I'll remember Japan itself when they start telling me to hate its people.

Fair Enough

Spelvin To The Tax Reviewer.

THE INCOME TAX reviewer called on George Spelvin, American, today, to go over his return for 1936, examine his private papers and ask some questions about his dreams and his personal life, and met a strange rebuff.

PEGLER.

"Nothing doing," Mr. Spelvin said. "Absolutely nothing doing."

"Now, don't be like that," the reviewer said. "It's the law, and you will only make trouble for yourself."

"Absolutely nothing doing," Mr. Spelvin insisted. "I am sore."

"What are you sore about?" the reviewer asked.

"I'm sore about this:—'Where did you get that $5?' and 'What did you do with that four-bits?' when Jimmy Roosevelt and the boss himself and Henry Morgenthau get special treatment."

"But they have to pay income tax," the reviewer said.

"Yes, and so do I," said Mr. Spelvin, "and I have paid it, but now you want to take up my time asking a lot of questions that are none of your business, and how do I know you aren't going to go out and get tight some night and spill a lot of gossip about me? And, moreover, I don't like the way they acted down in Washington when they were combing a lot of other people but refused to go into Jimmy's return or the President's or Henry's. That Republican Congressman said he had trustworthy reports that Jimmy made a big income selling insurance to people who wanted to stay in right with the Administration, but when he wanted to put an expert to work on Jimmy's returns, the way you want to pry into mine, the committee said, 'Nothing doing.' Well, all right, nothing doing on his or the President's or Henry, nothing doing on mine. I'm like Popeye. I'll do anything they do."

"BUT FOR GOSSAKES," the reviewer said, "Henry Morgenthau is my boss. Can you picture me going in and acting like that with the Secretary of the Treasury?"

"Henry ain't my boss," said Mr. Spelvin, "I only know the committee refused to let an expert like you go over Henry's returns, the same as the experts went over other people's, after Ham Fish challenged him. It's one thing to throw down a lot of papers like an inventory of the Pennsylvania Railroad and say, 'There it is. Help yourself, chum,' but it's something else to turn loose an expert to see what the figures mean. Henry said people had established losses by exchanging stocks, and he said this was unethical. And the record says Ham Fish charged before the committee that Henry did it himself before the law was changed. Well, did he or didn't he? Why not let an expert decide? What is the reason for all this bashfulness? Brother, I'm bashful myself."

"BUT SURELY you don't think there's anything funny about the President's returns," the reviewer said.

"Well, what makes you guys always think mine are so funny, then?" Mr. Spelvin demanded. "You seem to get a lot of laughs out of me. Well, I've got the same kind of a sense of humor, and I want a couple of laughs. You can't ever tell where you are going to turn up a laugh."

"What have you got against Jimmy, anyway?" the agent asked.

"Nothing," said Mr. Spelvin. "I don't even know the guy. But I'll ask you one:—What have you mugs got against me and a lot of other suckers? Always nosing around like a house dick, asking trick questions, pulling trick clauses on guys. Listen, brother, I haven't got any family connections or political connections, and any time I sell a bill of goods it's Spelvin working. I don't even belong to the Elks. I don't like that way of doing. You tell them for me it's unethical."

"Well, I am going to have to turn you in," said the agent.

"Go ahead," Mr. Spelvin said. "I am just practicing Mr. Roosevelt's preaching, and they can't hang you for that. I am hell on unethical conduct and special privilege."

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

I Remember—

(One hundred years after Thomas Hood.)

I remember, I remember
The world that used to be—
The little moments when a man
Could find tranquillity;
The days when breaking treaties was Considered pretty low,
And drooping bombs on babies' heads
Was scorned by any foe.

II.

I remember, I remember
When wars were very few—
When there were many nations that
Had something else to do;
The days when men believed like men,
With very little use
For tactics which would indicate
The zoo had broken loose.

III.

I remember, I remember
When treaties duly signed
Were thought to have some meaning
Of a rather legal kind—
When there were certain rules by which
All mankind played the game—
And to be caught obeying them,
Put nobody to shame.

IV.

I remember, I remember
When even Mars would make
An effort to protect the kids
And give the home a break—
When dropping shells in crowded streets
With just a "Pardon me!"
Would strike the lowest fighter as
The depth of infamy.

V.

I remember, I remember
When there were human rights
Which even bullies would respect
With but few oversights—
When murder was an ugly word
And even pirates wept
At thought of living by the code
That only cutthroats kept.

VI.

I remember, I remember
When nobody could grin
While shelling hospitals the while
They took the wounded in—
When no one burned a nursery
With laughter and with joy . . .
But civilization has advanced
Since I was but a boy.

Problem No. 1.

Now that the football season is over what does a fellow do if he is determined to spend Saturdays reading traffic signs, eating hot dogs, sitting in puddles and trying to get pneumonia?

Do You Remember——

Away back when if a family wanted to get much music it had to let the kids take piano or violin lessons?

Assist—Forgetting.

These country gals once they're in town
Need no kind admonition;
The city training puts them soon
In the mink of condition.

New G. O. P. Slant?

Observer Construes Hamilton Radio Talk As Sign of Redirection In Republican Policy For Benefit Of Capitol Delegates.

By Henry Carter.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

JOHN HAMILTON, chairman of the Republican National Committee, took to the air on November 28 to consider "How to Reverse the Recession." Primarily it was an appeal to Congress for a lightening of the restrictions and burdens of New Deal legislation upon private enterprise as a first essential toward the resumption of recovery.

Specifically, he urged that social security legislation be amended so as to reduce unnecessarily high taxes on employers and employes and to prevent the diversion of the proceeds of those taxes to meet current governmental expenditures. Labor relations legislation, he declared, required revision to check present tendencies toward class and intra-class warfare. The Administration's present securities legislation should be relaxed, he urged, so as to encourage the flow of capital into industry and to obviate the demoralizing effects of excessive Government regulation of securities exchanges. Finally, he called for repeal of the undistributed profits tax and revision of the capital gains tax in order to strengthen business against times of recession and to help stabilize business conditions.

Nothing Startling Seen In Hamilton's Suggestions.

IN THESE recommendations there was nothing especially new or startling. They amounted simply to a considered rehearsal of the remedial measures which have been increasingly under discussion in Congress, the press and the country at large, as the proportions of the present recession have progressively made themselves felt.

Nevertheless the speech was significant in its revelation of the extent to which Republican thought and opinion has come to accept certain principles of social and economic policy once claimed by the New Deal as its exclusive property.

This Mr. Hamilton explicitly admitted: "We readily recognize the desirability of measures which were not a part of our conception of Government some years ago." This was a wholesome acknowledgment, and, moreover, one which enabled Mr. Hamilton fairly to join issue with the New Deal, not upon the question of the desirability of its general social objectives with which in main there can be little real argument, but upon the extent to which Government can reasonably hope to promote these objectives, upon the efficacy of the measures and methods employed, and upon the effect of the employment of these methods and measures upon our political and economic institutions.

Mr. Hamilton's speech further revealed a definite shift of political policy and strategy within Republican councils:

Were I purely a partisan, I would hope that such a program would be adopted only when the credit for it would go to a Republican Congress. Faced, however, with this emergency I feel that every trace of partisanship should be abandoned. I most sincerely say that I felt some such program will be immediately adopted by the present Democratic Congress with the aid of all the Republican support that our representation in Congress can provide. I even hope that some such program may be adopted and promoted by the President of the United States.

Chicago Meeting To Pass On Hoover Idea Has Bearing.

TO APPRECIATE FULLY the significance of this declaration it is necessary to go back a month to the November 5 meeting of the Republican National Committee in Chicago. The main business of that meeting was to pass on former President Hoover's proposal for a midterm Republican convention to clarify and establish by formal declaration a program of Republican principle and policy, presumably as a basis for the 1938 Congressional campaign.

The suggestion had been first publicly advanced in an article of Mr. Hoover's published in the September issue of the Atlantic Monthly, and had subsequently been urged and promoted among members of the National Committee by Mr. Hoover and his associates, in spite of the almost open objections of Gov. Landon, the titular leader of the party, and the less direct but equally vital opposition of Senator Vandenberg.

Nevertheless, so far had Mr. Hoover been successful in his proselytizing that when the national committee met, November 5, there was a decisive majority of the committee, including Mr. Hamilton, which was definitely in favor of the Hoover proposal for a midterm convention, with its corollary recommendation of the appointment of a large committee of representative Republicans to prepare the convention agenda.

Mr. Hoover, however, had neglected to consider adequately one factor, which in the outcome proved to be the vital one, namely: How did the sitting Republican members of the Senate and House feel toward such a convention? This was not long in making itself known. There was a flat, uncompromising, and almost unanimous opposition on the ground that they felt the proposed convention would seriously hamper their freedom to function effectively in Congress, and instead of helping them in the 1938 campaign might well lead to a further reduction of Republican representation in Congress.

This view was conveyed to the national committee by Representative Martin, of Massachusetts, virtually in the form of an ultimatum backed, it was understood, by practically every Republican Senator and Representative. Confronted with such opposition, the committee was compelled to recede, although a surface compromise was arranged to prevent an open split. A Committee of One Hundred on Program was appointed to study and "ascertain as fully as possible the various views held by the rank and file of the Republican Party, its national and local leaders, including auxiliaries of men, women and youth."

The committee was instructed to complete its work at the earliest possible opportunity and to submit its report to the national committee, which would then determine "the most effective manner, whether by a national open forum, conference, or otherwise, of presenting such report for the consideration of the Nation." With this the Hoover adherents were obliged to be content, but they did not like it and the meeting broke up with a certain residue of hard feeling.

Congressional Group Blocks Early Report Of Committee.

THE NEXT STEP of the Hoover contingent was to endeavor to expedite the formation of the proposed Committee on Program in the hope that it might complete its work and report in time for consideration before the 1938 elections. To this the Congressional group were and are, completely opposed, and in view of their opposition it has not been surprising that many of the Republicans besought to accept appointment to the proposed committee have been, to say the least, backward about coming forward. With the convening of Congress it became clearer than ever that the Congressional group was in the driver's seat so far as direction of Republican policy is concerned and there the matter has rested and presumably will rest.

However, aside from this intra-party struggle for control of policy, it also became evident at the opening of Congress that a business recession had created a totally new political situation. In the face of the recession President Roosevelt's message asking for the passage of more New Deal legislation—the farm bill, the wages and hours bill, reorganization and regional planning—fell singularly flat in a skeptical Congress which had sensed the recession before the President and which was now thinking in terms of relief for business and of recovery before reform.

Given the attitude of the Republicans in Congress, the fact of the recession and the new political situation, a redirection of Republican policy was inevitable. The result was Mr. Hamilton's speech. Seen in this present light, Mr. Hoover's proposal for a midterm convention and a formal establishment of Republican doctrine and policy seems out of date and malapropos.

The ascendancy of the Congressional group in Republican councils seems definitely established and in accepting it Mr. Hamilton has been both smart and wise. In upholding the hands of the Republicans in Congress, by outlining informally a nonpartisan program upon which Republicans and opposition Democrats alike can co-operate freely and without embarrassment, he has done much to restore the possibilities of party effectiveness. For it was this policy which had such striking results in the Supreme Court fight.

Peace Moves

By Barnet Nover.

Japan Seeks A Settlement.

FOR MORE THAN four months the Japanese have been so busy killing off their customers in China they have not had much time to consider the possible effect of this slaughter on their own fortunes. The desire to humble China has pushed all other considerations aside.

But now this question is beginning to perplex them. And they are beginning to wonder whether, as conquerors, they are not in danger of being altogether too successful for their own good. For a really smashing victory over China, leading to the collapse of the central government, may rob Japan of the gains she hopes to achieve through force of arms and leave her with nothing but glory to show for her pains. Glory, as it happens, is an unsatisfactory article of diet—even in Japan.

* * * *

A DECADE AGO Japanese Liberals—a vanished group in the island empire of today—held to the belief that it was to Japan's advantage to have China united, progressive and prosperous. China was one of Japan's important customers and had possibilities of becoming more and more important in this regard for as China developed Japan, its closest neighbor, could profit by it to a greater extent than any other power.

So such men as Baron Shidehara, Junnosuke Inouye and others argued that it was to Japan's own interests to live on terms of peace and friendship with China and help her on the road to unity and prosperity. Hate, they realized, is anything but a commercial asset.

But the militarists who have been in the saddle in Japan for the past six years have refused to see the China problem in just this way. Both for economic and strategic reasons (that is, with reference to a possible war between Japan and Russia) they, too, want China to be friendly. But they are convinced that the best way of achieving that objective is by bomb and bayonet. And so for the past six years one effort after another has been made to browbeat the Chinese into a readiness to "co-operate" with Japan on terms of "friendship."

* * * *

OF COURSE the system has not worked and there is not the slightest prospect that it ever will work. But the militarists of the island empire are more determined than ever to stick to their scheme. As a by-product they have laid their hands on and hold large sections of China.

Whether Chiang Kai-shek can hold out remains to be seen. If he does, regardless of whether he is steadily forced to retreat farther into the interior, the war will go on and more and more Chinese territory will fall into the hands of the invaders. But the cumulative effect of all these gains far from being advantageous to Japan may, on the contrary, be disastrous to her.

So clearly is this being realized in some Japanese quarters that one peace balloon after another has been floated. Very definitely, an effort is being made to persuade the Chinese that further resistance is futile and that if peace is made now the terms will be far less favorable than they might be if made later.

* * * *

THE SANER elements in Japan are beginning to wonder whether it would be to Japan's real advantage to smash China or even to eliminate Chiang who alone of all the figures thrown up in the turmoil of the republican era has shown real statesmanlike capacity.

Should China lapse into chaos, with military adventurers struggling for mastery in each province and banditry the occupation of millions of undisciplined soldiers, the China market would inevitably dwindle. That would certainly not profit Japan for it is to China which Japan looks to for ever-increasing sales of goods manufactured in the mills of Osaka. And a chaotic China would necessitate the maintenance by Japan of large garrisons at strategic points involving a cost which Japan is certain to find it increasingly hard to bear. It is, in fact, a very real possibility that the collapse of China would lead to the collapse of Japan.

* * * *

A FEW years after the World War the Allies and the United States discovered they had achieved too great a triumph. Great Britain's outstanding commercial rival, Germany, was prostrate. But because Germany was prostrate Great Britain was in dire straits too. For, while Germany had certainly been a dangerous rival, she had also been, before the war, one of England's great customers. For all the talk of the value of colonies as sources of raw materials and markets for excess goods, actually the trade of the entire world with all existing colonies is only a small percentage of the trade between three or four of the largest industrial nations. Poor nations make poor customers.

Thus it was not many years before the victor nations began to advance funds to Germany to rehabilitate its railroads, its factories, its finances. Nor did Germany ever pay for the war, as some of the peacemakers at Paris in 1919 insisted she should.

* * * *

THUS DESPITE its triumphs at Shanghai, North China and Inner Mongolia and the impending capture of Nanking, Japan's situation is far from happy.

The burden of war has borne down heavily on the harassed Japanese people. But there is no immediate prospect that this burden will materially diminish in the near future. Should China continue to resist there is certainty that it will increase. That is why the Japanese want peace.

The whole bloody business in the Far East today is an anachronism. Japan can never conquer China in the sense of making all of that vast land a colony ruled from Tokyo as is Korea. She can dominate China by ruling through puppets with the acquiescence of the Chinese. But the hatred of the Japanese is now so strong in China that this will prove no easy matter to achieve. The Japanese militarists think and act in twentieth century terms when it comes to making war. But they are hopelessly outdated in their economic thinking. Even if Japan wins there is a strong posibility she may make no profit out of her victory.

A New National Bird?

Can the turkey wrest the heavyweight symbol championship from the titled eagle? This is the question for which the turkey areas of the United States Northwest seek an affirmative answer. And no less an organization than the Northwestern Turkey Growers Association is on the sidelines for the historic bird that made the Pilgrims famous.

The proposal to make the turkey the national bird is submitted seriously. It has "better habits" than its "bald-headed" competitor. It is "a native of America." It is "by far the nobler bird." These are some of the reasons advanced by the proponents of the movement for the glorification of the turkey. And it must be acknowledged that its nobility is often shown in the dignity and resignation it displays when the annual Thanksgiving Day proclamation forecasts its future prospects.

But the average American, whose special interest in the turkey lies in "a slice of white meat, please, with plenty of gravy," is somewhat confused over a movement to elevate the turkey to the level of a national symbol, and then—eat the symbol.

Tom McCarthy

"Treat 'Em Right," Says Tony.

"TONY what does a barber think about?"

"Ho, ho, Mr. McCarthy, alla time joke with Tony."

"No, I'm looking for a column."

"Ho, ho, you putta me in paper, no?"

"Me putta you in paper, yes."

"Me no know what I think, very much."

"Well, what are the rules which make a good barber?"

"You wanta me make up rules?"

"Yes, you think them up."

"Cutta da hair at same time?"

"If you can."

"Sure, me think and cut, too."

"Ho, ho, Mr. McCarthy, joka alla time."

McCARTHY.

"Ho, ho, Mr. McCarthy in plenty tough spot with no column done." Having delivered myself of that I leaned back in the chair while Tony thought, and cut.

* * * *

"ME GOTTA da rule," Tony said. "To be as professional as possible."

"That's fine," I said, "but what does that mean."

"To be professional, like lawyer or doctor, only to be a barber, instead."

"That's mighty helpful, Tony, have you got any more of those?"

"Sure, many more, but justa minute."

Tony thought for quite a long time.

"How about hot towel and massage?" he said finally.

"Don't like 'em."

"I couldn't stand it, Tony. I get embarrassed easily."

"Then you no want hot towel and massage."

"No want."

"Should have."

"No want."

"Well, then," Tony said, "take time for shampoo. Hair mighty dirty! Hasn't been washed in month, maybe no."

"Keep cuttin' it, Tony. And if you've got to make a crack like that, don't say it so loud."

"I gotta rule, now, Mr. McCarthy."

"Fine."

"Never force suggestion on customer."

"Yeah, forcing a suggestion is pretty bad. But you've been trying to sell me something, yourself, for the last four minutes."

"Didn't half try," Tony said. "Other barbers much worse. Me professional. Never force suggestion. Hair still need shampoo, though."

* * * *

"WHAT'S THE funniest thing that ever happened to you when you were cutting somebody's hair?"

"Something to laugh for?"

"Yeah."

"That reminds me of 'nother rule. Even if you do it wrong, do what customer wants. Do what he says. Never mind how silly he look."

"Is that what you're doing now."

"Ho, ho, Mr. McCarthy alla time have joke. Tony suit Mr. McCarthy's personality to his hair."

"You mean my haircut to my personality?"

"Well, how about the rule you were going to give me?"

"Rule three—do what customer say."

"How about an example?"

"Me cutta alla man's hair off, once. He have too many drinks. But he think it good idea. Tony no argue."

"You're a card, Tony, you're a card."

"Nother time, man came in with too many drinks. I cut his hair. I shampoo, hot towel and massage. He pay me. Says he feel so good he wants it all over again. I no argue. He pay me twice."

"He was a pretty good customer."

PledgesBroken In Postal Bill, 3 Senators Say

By James D. Secrest.

A predominantly Democratic Congress will break a pledge the party made in its 1936 platform if it refuses to extend the merit system to the appointment of first, second and third class postmasters, three Senators charged yesterday in a minority report on the McKellar bill.

Senators O'Mahoney (Democrat), of Wyoming; Logan (Democrat), of Kentucky, and La Follette (Progressive), of Wisconsin, urged that the Ramspeck civil service bill adopted by the House be substituted.

"The theory that members of Congress should be permitted to appoint postmasters is in violation of our constitutional system," the minority report stated, "which prescribes that officers of the United States shall be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, except that 'the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they think proper in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments.'"

Bridges Fears Spoils System.

A more blistering minority report was filed by Senator Bridges (Republican), of New Hampshire, who charged that passage of the McKellar bill "will again saddle the Postoffice Department with the spoils system."

Senator McKellar (Democrat), of Tennessee, in defending his bill in the minority report, asked:

"Why undertake to tear down so splendid a system and substitute in its place a system of centralized bureaucracy? Why substitute inefficiency for efficiency?"

The McKellar bill, which seeks to invalidate President Roosevelt's executive order, is expected to provoke a bitter fight on the Senate floor when it is called up.

"The bill reported by the majority and the alternatives offered by the minority," the O'Mahoney report asserted, "represent a clear-cut issue between the patronage system on the one hand and the merit system on the other.

"The bills also present a clear-cut issue between the repudiation of party promises represented in the majority bill and the redemption of those promises represented in the substitute urged by the minority."

President Roosevelt, the minority Senators said, "has given emphatic proof of the sincerity of his intentions" by ordering civil service legislation and issuing the executive order temporarily placing the postmasters in the merit system.

Would Reward Diligence.

"It is the belief of the minority that salaries should go to the persons who actually do the work," the report added, "that every postal employe, when he enters the postal service, should feel that by diligence he could attain a postmastership and that even when an administration changes, no political employe could come into the postoffice in which he works and begin immediately to receive a salary of 40 per cent in excess of that which he receives."

Said Senator Bridges, "The passage of this bill will put a premium on politics to the detriment of the postal service."

The majority report charged the Civil Service Commission with making "a determined effort" for a number of years to obtain control of the appointment of first, second and third-class postmasters and added, "There has been a great deal of propaganda in behalf of this proposal."

Rep. Schulte Proposes Parley on D. C. Traffic

Representative Schulte (Democrat), of Indiana, yesterday proposed that all District officials associated with traffic-law enforcement be called together for a conference with the House District Committee. He said he will suggest the move to Chairman Palmisano (Democrat), of Maryland.

Schulte said he favors an increase in the number of policemen assigned to traffic duty and the detailing of traffic officers to precincts rather than to the police traffic bureau.

Hunt for Revenue Again Turns To U. S. and State Securities

House Sub-Committee Weighs Amendment and Rate-Fixing Methods to Make Exempt Incomes Usable for Levies.

The House search for budget-balancing revenues yesterday swung around again to the great $50,522,000,000 pool of Federal and State securities in an effort to find legal means of tapping their now tax-exempt interest.

A Ways and Means tax sub-committee considered both a Constitutional amendment and a direct legislative alternative method of plugging the tax-exempt hole, but reached no final conclusions.

Although Chairman Fred M. Vinson has definitely asserted the group does not intend to increase the total of tax revenues, possible losses from business tax modification and probable need of farm program financing sent the sub-committee in quest of new tax sources.

Although estimates are not yet final, Vinson contends no losses will result from proposed sub-committee revision of the undivided profits and capital gains taxes, but an additional $15,000,000 will be picked up from "simplification" of the estate and gift taxes.

The sub-committee chairman said the Constitutional amendment route to tax-exempt security taxation will have to be considered by the House Judiciary Committee. The alternative legislative method was originally proposed by Senator Carter Glass, of Virginia, while Secretary of the Treasury. This proposal would use tax-exempt income to determine an individual tax rate, but would apply this rate only to the person's other income.

The sub-committee sought means of permitting the Federal Government to tax interest on $14,854,000,000 of State and municipal securities with reciprocal arrangements for States and municipalities to tax $35,548,000,000 of Federal securities.

Proposed Federal taxation of the salaries of State employes, now exempt, also figured in the discussion.

Vinson said the sub-committee may wait until the Supreme Court hands down a decision dealing with a State's right to tax Federal income, before reaching conclusions.

The pending court test case raises the question of whether a State has the right to tax the income received by a contractor from the Federal Government for work done within the State—in this case on Grand Coulee Dam, in Washington.

The sub-committee had no estimates on revenues that might be yielded from taxation of the several tax-exempt sources.

Vinson supplied figures showing the total of outstanding Federal securities, tax exempt and partially exempt, is $46,350,000,000, of which $10,802,000,000 is not in the hands of "ordinary investors." This leaves $35,548,000,000 in Federal securities, of which $12,993,000,000 are wholly exempt from taxation.

Bystander Shot In Holdup Battle

od of attack was the grocery store operated by Abraham Kaufman at 1501 T street northwest. There they got $65 from Kaufman and $92 from the cash register, and swept up pocketsful of cigars and chewing gum from the counter.

Next they struck the grocery store of Sidney Feldstein at 1819 Fifteenth street northwest, where they took $10 from Feldstein and $86 from the register.

Clerk Severely Mauled.

At 300 New York avenue northwest they held up Harry Greenburg, took $100 from his pockets and an undetermined amount from the register.

From there they went to 1000 Seventh street northwest, held up the liquor store operated by Jacob Farber and took $75 from Benjamin Wolson, manager. Mrs. Farber was in the store, but was not molested.

The fifth holdup was at a liquor store at 1439 Eleventh street, where the bandits lifted $125 from Milton Werber, proprietor, and rifled the cash register of $40. There Arthur Harris, a clerk, reached nervously for his handkerchief and was yanked across the counter and severely mauled by one of the bandits.

One of the two bandits who worked inside the stores was described as having medium dark skin, 30 years old, 6 feet tall, 170 pounds in weight and wearing a black overcoat and dark hat. The other was said to be dark brown, 34 years old, 5 feet 6 inches tall, weighing 140 pounds and wearing a brown suit and brown felt hat.

C.I.O. to Be Enjoined From Picketing Furrier

An injunction forbidding picketing of H. Zirkin & Sons, furriers, of 821 Fourteenth street northwest, will be signed by Chief Justice Alfred A. Wheat, of District Court, he indicated yesterday, at conclusion of a hearing in which rival labor groups were at loggerheads.

The store has been picketed by a C. I. O. fur workers union, while employes of the store are members of an A. F. of L. union. It was claimed the controversy was not one involving labor, since the employes were members of a union and had a signed agreement with the management.

Contract Bridge

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson

Every player who aspires to greater heights should make a thorough study of the elimination and throw-in play. The opportunity for its use arises so frequently that it is an indispensable feature of every expert's, or even good player's, repertory. It was the only means by which the vulnerable small slam, in the hand below, could be brought home.

North, dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 N T	Pass	3 ♠	Pass
4 ♠	Pass	6 ♠	Pass
Pass	Pass

West chose what appeared to be his safest opening lead—the club Jack. Declarer surveyed his material and saw that there was acute danger of losing both a heart and a diamond trick. To avoid one of these he determined to attempt a strip-and-throw-in play.

Winning with the club Ace, he ruffed a low club, re-entered dummy with a trump to ruff another club, and repeated this process to ruff his last club, noting with satisfaction that the opposing trumps dropped in two leads. The Ace and King of hearts were cashed, and a third round threw West on lead.

West realized what was happening and attempted to confuse the issue by leading the diamond Jack, hoping that declarer would go up with dummy's King and finesse on the way back.

As a matter of fact, declarer was faced with a very hard guess, and it was only because of his intimate knowledge of West's psychology that he was able to read West's nefarious intention. After much thought, he won with his own Ace, and finessed up to the King-10.

It is true that even the best play, involving elimination-and-throw-in, left declarer with a difficult guess. But the point is that without such a play he would not even have had that much chance for success.

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

The richest man in the Roosevelt Cabinet, Homer Cummings, rejoices appropriately in the most imposing residence. The Attorney General's home is virtually a country estate in town (rus in urbe) on a hill overlooking Rock Creek Park, at 2700 Tilden, not far from the heart of Washington.

On a still night with a south wind the Cummings could (if they listened) hear the lions roar in the nearby Zoo.

• • • •

There must be at least 25 rooms in the rambling stone mansion, including a glassed-in sundeck-conservatory on top, and the grounds are a well-wooded 10 acres, entered through a hospitable stone gateway without a gate.

• • • •

An urbane government leaves the Tilden street curb strewn with paper and packing cases, and Mr. Cummings should sick Edgar Hoover on 'em. The place must cost Mr. Cummings around half his $15,000 salary every year.

"—not far from the lions."

Aristocratic Senator Gerry and his charming wife live in a town house two doors from the wealthy Secretary of the Navy, at No. 2132 R . . . It's a dignified 4-story dark red brick and stone, sandwiched in tightly between the adjoining houses.

A few rather weary shrubs adorn the 20-foot lawn. It's about half as large as Justice Hughes' house in the next block, but the rent must be over $300 a month.

• • • •

In more plebeian style Harry Hopkins, the WPA chief, dwells a few blocks away from Jimmy Roosevelt and Cabot Lodge, in Washington's "Greenwich Village" section, at 2821 N street . . . It's a modest three-story wooden house, with white 10-inch clapboards in the Georgetown manner, green shutters and copper screens, flush with the sidewalk and two steps down.

• • • •

This would be esteemed a tidy but unassuming dwelling in his home town out West . . . Colored children play around his door and, as in many blocks in this neighborhood, Negro homes are next door to those of fashionable whites . . .

It is a topnotch symbol of New Deal democracy; no swank . . . A western mortgage chap wouldn't lend much more than $2,000 on it, but Mr. Hopkins probably pays around $125 a month rent.

• • • •

In the imposing block long 9-story apartment house at No. 2101 Connecticut, atop the hill half-way between Dupont Circle and the Zoo, dwell Justice Cardozo, Senators Borah and McNary and many a lesser Government luminary and, until recently, there dwelt also Justice Van Devanter . . .

It is ultrarespectable rather than modish, with its ornate stone-trimmed buff brick, its glass canopy, and it gargoyles.

"—twixt the Circle and the Zoo"

The huge carpeted marble foyer is replete with big chairs and settees, and a colored elevator man sits solemnly behind the glory of his white cotton gloves . . . From the small crescent driveway the great pass through polished brass doors and beneath an imposing chandelier . . .

• • • •

Next door at No. 2029 dwells Justice Sutherland amid similar splendors and potted palms, and two blocks away at 2205 California street lives Justice Brandeis in an older but somewhat similar apartment house. Rents run around $250 to $300 for largish suites.

About 5 minutes brisk walk across Lafayette Square north from the White House (or 3½ minutes at a dogtrot) reside Tommy Corcoran and Ben Cohen, brilliant hallroom boys of the New Deal, at 1610 K . . . Their apartment is on the second floor of a small two-story stone business building . . . Across the street is the "little green house" where President Harding played poker.

• • • •

Below them is a finance and mortgage company, stark symbol of the profit motive. By pure coincidence, next door is the national headquarters of the American Legion keeping an eye on these new-fangled ideas. . . .

As bachelo. , Messrs. Corcoran and Cohen probably get by for $50 apiece in rent, on this business street, and thus maintain a healthy proletarian viewpoint.

Recluse Held for Killing Girl in Store Chalking

Newport News, Va., Dec 3 (AP).—Michael Ritter, 77-year-old recluse, was held today for the grand jury on charges of murder and felonious shooting in the death of a 12-year-old schoolgirl and the wounding of another.

The charges grew out of the slaying of Sue Stokes and the wounding of Mary Ellen Coleman Tuesday near Ritter's store building which, he had complained, has been defaced by children's chalk marks.

Philadelphia Team Ties for Bridge Lead

New Yorkers Share Honor With 46 Matches Out of Possible 75.

Capital's Best Contenders Enter Finals, Win 40 Matches.

By Marian H. Barre.

A neck-and-neck finish marked the second qualifying session of the team-of-four championship, played yesterday afternoon in the national contract bridge tournament, two teams tying with 46 matches won, out of a possible 75. The leaders were the Philadelphia outfit of Charles Goren, J. S. Jackson, Charles Solomon, John Crawford and Mrs. R. C. Young, and the team formed by Harry Fishbein, Phil Abramsohn, Henry Chenin and Morrie Elis. Except Chanin, who comes from Atlanta, all members of the second team are New Yorkers, who have won about every notable bridge trophy during their brief careers. Fishbein captured the mixed pair championship, playing with Mrs. Sam Rush only the day before.

The Philadelphians play as the "Team of Brotherly Love." It is the same line-up that took the Eynon Bowl from the District players in the tournament of 1936. The leaders entered the session with Goren's team half a board up on their rivals —22 boards to 21½ for the New Yorkers. Fred D. Kaplan's team took third place immediately behind his former teammates, Fishbein and Elis.

D. C. Team in Finals.

Washington's best hope, the team of McIntyre, Thurtell, the Lemons and Watson, wno 40 matches and entered the finals. Twenty-five teams enrolled in the first session, 13 qualified. The maximum carryover was announced as 60 per cent.

There were surprising upsets in the first round of play, some of the favorite teams finishing far down the line. Among them was the team captained by Oswald Jacoby. About every expert in the country is here in Washington.

The most gruelling play of the entire tournament will come in the open pair game, scheduled to begin tomorrow afternoon. Play will continue through a second session held in the evening. These are qualifying rounds; players who escape elimination will then enter the semifinals on Sunday afternoon, after which another elimination takes place. The finals will be played off Sunday evening.

Many Notables on Hand.

Among the luminaries who arrived here for the team game were Jacoby, Nate Spingold, donor of the international bridge trophy; Huber Boscowitz, John Rau, the "wonder boy," who defeated the Culbertsons in his first major game; M. D. Maier, B. J. Becker, technician of bridge headquarters; A. M. Barnes, and many others. Jacoby is not playing the Four Ace team that recently won the Vanderbilt Cup. His teammates in this tournament are Becker, Maier and Von Zedtwitz.

Washington has six teams entered besides the local players who have teamed up with out-of-town players. Besides the McIntyre team, there are the teams of Hamlin, Conolly, Mrs. West and Stockvis; the Chess Club team of Lewis, Stevenson, Klein and Gay; the team of Cheeks, Cheeks, King and Westrich; the Gardners, Mrs. Pennebaker, and Mrs. Boyce, and a local trio of Mrs. McKenzie, Gray, and Donnelly, with Mrs. S. A. Herzog, New York, as fifth member; Lake and Elliott teamed with the Atlantans and Roth and Brotman, with New Yorkers.

An amateur game held yesterday afternoon was won in the north-south positions by Mrs. Rose Robins and Mrs. F. Samuels; in the east-west by James Sourilas and Mrs. J. F. Murphy. Runners-up were Mrs. T. D. Sheldon and Mrs. Lillian Clarke, and Mrs. Bolivar Lloyd and Mrs. Maurice Reddy.

Outstanding Hand Given.

One of the outstandign hands of the tournament was played in the first session of the team match. There was a difference of over 1,000 points between two east-west scores. The hand follows:

North.
S—A K 10
H—J
D—Q 10 8 7
C—10 8 7 6 2

West.
S—Q 7 6 4 2
H—K 10 4 2
D—
C—A Q 4 3

East.
S—9 5
H—A 9 7 6 5 3
D—6 5 4 3 2
C—

South.
S—J 8 3
H—Q 8
D—A K J 9
C—K J 9 5

Both sides vulnerable; West dealer.

Top score, 1,380 points, was made by W. H. Woolworth, bridge editor of the Buffalo Courier, and J. M Lewis, of Cleveland, playing East-West. Lewis' four-heart contract was doubled by the opposing pair, Woolworth promptly redoubled. Declarer made an extra trick, with a premium of 400 points, 500 points for a vulnerable game, and a redoubled trick score of 480 points.

A sacrifice bid of 5 diamonds by North-South was set three tricks, doubled for a penalty of 800 points when John Donnelly played the South hand against Gordon Gibbs and Dick Skinner. Jacoby's teammates played the hand at four hearts, making five, but couldn't coax a double from Perry and Vor-Zimmer, who were defending it.

Some of the bidding on this hand was as fantastic as anything heard in the tournament. One East player "psyched" a club after the bid was passed around to him third hand. The opposing South doubled for a take-out and North bid two diamonds. This pair also played the hand at five diamonds, doubled. When west opened with a spade, the four heart contract was reached rapidly without successful interference from the defense, but most West players considered the hand too light to be opened vulnerable.

Cantrel, of Chevy Chase, member of the Maryland House of Delegates. Standing by the queen are her two princesses, Mrs. Elizabeth M. Raines and Miss Gladys Cecelia Powell. At right is part of the crowd of youngsters which watched the long parade of more than 2,000 persons file down a lane bordered by 20,000 spectators.

Miss Bethesda-Chevy Chase, in the person of Mrs. Margaret Sartwell Perrell, attractive 21-year-old brunette, was crowned queen last night while 20,000 cheering subjects looked on. The crown was placed on the shapely head of the queen by Joseph A. Cantrel, of Chevy Chase, county member of the Maryland House of Delegates.

Attending Her Majesty were two princesses, Mrs. Elizabeth M. Raines, 21, and Miss Gladys Cecelia Powell, 17, who, like the queen, were chosen in a beauty contest.

The coronation was high point of a gala evening which marked the opening of the second Christmas Lane of the Bethesda Chamber of Commerce. A parade of nearly 2,000 preceded the coronation exercises.

The queen and her attendants rode in the parade to the reviewing stand and were led to their place by officials while the Fort Stevens Post, American Legion, Drum and Bugle Corps, served as guard of honor.

Baseballs, footballs and other gifts were provided for the younger element who attended the parade and a block dance in the park and shop center was the culminating event.

Awards were made as follows:

Most comical unit, Bethesda Building Supply Co.; best musical unit, Chestnut Farms Band; best marching unit, Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School; best Junior American Legion Drum and Bugle Corps, Barber-Briggs Post, of Gaithersburg; best Montgomery County float, Ayrlawn Farms; most original Montgomery County unit, Northwest Motor Co.; best juvenile unit, Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School; best visiting float, Frederick, Md., Voiture, 48 and 8; most original unit, Ayrlawn Farms.

The judges were Judge Donald DeLashmutt, Walter Johnson and Arthur Riley.

Tuberculosis Deaths in D. C. Decline 15 Pct.

Year's Total Forecast at 560, Compared to 661 in 1936.

Tuberculosis mortality in the District, where the "white plague" death rate has been the Nation's highest, has decreased slightly more than 15 per cent this year, statistics of the health department revealed yesterday.

For the period ended November 30, 510 persons died of tuberculosis. It was estimated the mark would reach 560 before end of the year.

In 1936, 661 tuberculosis sufferers died here. The decrease in deaths, officials commented, was due largely to the greater number of patients given treatment at Glenn Dale and Gallinger Hospitals.

Health Officer George C. Ruhland, writing for the District Medical Society's monthly publication, blamed late diagnosis of the disease in patients as one of the chief reasons for the high death rate.

"Discovery of tuberculosis is not made until after the disease has reached the far-advanced stage in a large percentage of cases," he wrote.

Other points made by Dr. Ruhland in his article were:

"Reporting of cases of tuberculosis is in a large majority of instances delayed until the patient dies or is about to die. Mortality is about twice as high among white males as white females. Mortality among colored males is only slightly higher than for colored females."

Mortality among whites is decreasing more rapidly than among colored people, Dr. Ruhland stated. Colored mortality, he said, has been stationary since 1920.

Lady (Bad) Luck Enlists Traffic To Halt Pilferer

Lewis Patton, colored, had a lot of luck yesterday, but it was all bad.

Lewis dashed from a Seventh street department store, his arms laden with pilfered feminine unmentionables, just in time to be smacked by an automobile. As if that were not enough, the automobile knocked Lewis into a street car.

Morris Leventhal, proprietor of the store at 1522 Seventh street northwest, said Lewis sauntered in, picked up a pile of lingerie and charged out the door.

After his double-barreled encounter with traffic he was picked up and taken to Freedmen's Hospital, where he was treated for a fracture of the left leg and internal injuries. He had not been charged late yesterday.

District Sodality Students to Meet

Under sponsorship of the Georgetown College Sodality of Our Lady, about 100 student representatives of the Sodality Union of Washington will convene at the Hilltop at 9 o'clock this morning for an all-day conference on Catholic problems.

John W. Nurre, prefect of the Georgetown Sodality, which is observing its 127th anniversary this year, will preside at the two sessions. The Sodality organizer for the Eastern States, the Rev. Francis P. LeBuffe, S. J., of New York, also will attend.

The students, however, will be in charge of their own discussions. Of prime interest to the conference this year, it was said, is the use of school plays, the Catholic press, the radio and public forum to bring attention to problems of the church.

Revision of Business Privilege Tax Suggested by Its 'Father'

Rep. McGehee Now Favors Either Flat Tax on Graduated Scale or Sales Levy; to Recommend Study Soon.

The self-styled "father of the District business privilege tax" suggested that it might be well to revise it.

Representative McGehee (Democrat), Mississippi, who said he first sugested the tax while a member of the Kennedy sub-committee of the House District Committee, said that a flat tax on a graduated scale would be preferable to the gross receipts levy.

"We had to draft that other bill in such a hurry," he said, "that we didn't have time to work out a graduated scale. Besides, I don't think it fair to tax a lawyer or a doctor just making a living the same fee as his colleagues who were getting wealthy."

McGehee said he still indorses the principle of the business privilege tax, although he is inclined to look with favor on a general sales tax that would allow no exemptions.

"There is a great deal to be said for a sales tax," he said. "It is painless, raises money quickly and in large amounts, and reaches a lot of tourists and part-time residents who would otherwise escape local taxation."

Mississippi has a 2 per cent sales tax, he said, and has accumulated a reserve of several millions of dollars.

McGehee said he would recommend to Chairman Palmisano, of the House District Committee, that a sub-committee be put to work on the local tax problem as soon as the regular session of Congress opens so that it would have plenty of time to work out an equitable tax bill.

Under the graduated scale which McGehee has in mind for the business privilege levy, merchants might be taxed according to their stock on hand within broad classifications. Professional men would pay a flat fee however.

Life Is Longest In Great Plains, Survey Shows

Public Health Statistician Finds Expectation There Greatly Increased.

The best place in the United States to be born, for the greatest expectation of life, is somewhere in the eastern Great Plains States from North Dakota to Oklahoma, a United States Public Health Service statistician reported yesterday.

Other conclusions by Harold F. Dorn, who was assigned to make a study of the increase in average length of life in the United States, included:

The increase in expectation of life which has occurred since 1900 cannot be repeated in the next generation unless methods are developed for preventing and controlling the diseases of middle life and old age, notably cancer and heart disease.

The ultimate longevity attainable with present knowledge is about 70 years, about 10 years greater than in 1900.

Among white persons, the increase in expecation of life at birth since 1900 has been 60 per cent greater for city dwellers, as opposed to inhabitants of rural communities.

Improvements in health have resulted in keeping a larger proportion of the population alive until late adult life, yet those who reach middle age and beyond can expect to live very little, if any, longer than Americans of a century ago.

A child born in the United States in 1933, Dorn reported, could expect to live 12 years longer than his parents could have expected to live at their birth. Whereas, one-fourth of the babies born in 1901 died before their twenty-fifth birthday, the same proportion born in 1933 could look forward to celebrating their fifty-second birthday.

Arrests in Md. Hint at Ring of Counterfeiters

Secret Service Follows Up Clews From 2 Admitted Bad Note Passers.

Disclosures involving an Eastern ring of counterfeit note passers appeared imminent here last night as the Secret Service investigated clews obtained from two men under arrest in Hagerstown, Md.

The men, who gave their names as John Bennett, 28, and Jack Merhige, 45, both of Brooklyn, N. Y., offered a $20 bill in payment for a small purchase at a Hagerstown poultry store. A local bank identified the bill as counterfeit. Police Capt. Carl H. McCleary said $40 in counterfeit notes was discovered in a secret compartment of the automobile the men were driving. He said the pair admitted attempting to pass the $20 note and also had confessed paying $26 for each $100 in spurious notes. They said they had passed a number of them in western Virginia.

Seeking to connect the case with counterfeit operations throughout the Eastern States, Secret Service agents took the men to Baltimore last night.

Man Gets Job, Thanks To Arrest of His Son

William PrPeston, father of a 12-year-old boy arested for selling shoe strings, goes to work today for the District government and now believes that the arrest was really a favor to him and his wife and five children.

Unemployed for months, Preston received the work order yesterday from Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen. His son Donald, 12, was arrested Wednesday night while selling shoe strings on the streets in an attempt to earn a little money for the poverty-stricken family.

Estimate Places D.C. Population at 627,000 as of July

A population increase never before equaled in history of the District of Columbia was revealed yesterday by the Census Bureau in its estimate of population by States as of last July 1. The estimate gave the District a population of 627,000, as compared with the official 1930 census count of 486,869.

Population throughout the Nation has increased since 1930, the estimate showed, the total estimated gain being 6,481,954.

Sanitary Co. Signs Contracts With A. F. of L.

Agreements With Unions Follow Employes' Vote for Affiliation.

The Sanitary Grocery Co. announced last night it had entered into contracts with American Federation of Labor unions having jurisdiction over its grocery managers, clerks, butchers, teamsters and warehousemen.

The announcement followed action of the employes in voting 937 to 323 for affiliation with the A. F. of L. as their sole bargaining agent, ratifying a truce which ended the recent strike of more than 1,300 workers, in which they sought a salary minimum of $21 a week, a 51-hour week, closed shop, seniority priority in layoffs, time and a half for overtime and vacations with pay.

"The contracts were executed pursuant to the policy of the company in negotiating contracts with its employes who vote for union affiliation," said a statement issued last night by officials of the company.

"Similar contracts have been entered into covering the employes of the company in Richmond, Va.

"Before the poll was taken the terms of the contracts were agreed to both by the employer and by the unions, subject to the result of the vote for all employes affected.

"All contracts are for a period of nine months and have a clause providing for renewal from year to year by mutual consent. The contracts provide for minimum wages and maximum hours. All contain identical machinery for the adjustment of any differences which may arise from any cause whatsoever. They provide that all regular employes shall become members of the union having jurisdiction over them, and that new employes, selected by the company shall become union members."

The candid camera slides used measured only about an inch square and were projected on a 20-foot square by means of a special machine equipped with cooling devices.

HOLC's Health Grant Arouses Senators' Ire

Differing Views Voiced on Right to Allocate Government Funds.

Sharply differing opinions on the right of the Home Owners Loan Corporation to allocate Government funds to the Group Health Association were expressed yesterday as a Senatorial investigation of the health co-operative appeared probable.

Meanwhile, the newly established Committee for Co-operative Medical Service for Federal Employes deferred action in setting up its own organization until the legal status of the GHA is clarified.

Bombarded on two fronts, the GHA is facing direct opposition by the District Medical Society, and a flank attack by Senators McCarran, Nevada, and King, Utah, who object to its use of Federal funds.

"The argument over employing Government money in establishing the GHA boils down to interpretation of the law," an HOLC official stated yesterday. "Our board of directors decided that it was legal to make a two-year $40,000 investment in the health of our employes. We have no intention of continuing the subsidy, as the GHA is expected to become self-supporting. We look upon this investment as similar to departmental installation of air-conditioning—and there's no objection to that!

"We are treating 35 to 40 people a day, and we expect to go ahead just as if nothing had happened."

Taking a conflicting view, Senator McCarran declared last night that "if Federal funds can be diverted, what's the use of Congress?"

"Any group of Federal or private employes has the right to enter into co-operation on any subject, but no Federal agency has the right to divert funds," McCarran asserted. "If this allocation goes through, then every department will be appropriating funds intended by Congress for some other purpose.

"I haven't made up my mind yet what to do about it, but Congress will meet this with some action."

McCarran said he was awaiting a letter from W. F. Penniman, assistant general manager of HOLC, furnishing details of the grant made to the health co-operative.

Declaring that "if the allocation has been made, they ought to refund it," Senator King observed that the "United States Government can't furnish medical services to every employe."

A. C. Edwards, secretary of the Committee for Co-operative Medical Service for Government Employes, said his group did not intend to use Federal funds.

"We can proceed to set up our clinic," he stated, "when the corporation counsel determines the legal status of the GHA."

At Corporation Counsel Elwood Seal's office it was said the charges brought against the GHA were still under consideration.

Funds Lack Is Blamed for Gallinger Ills

By Gerald G. Gross

The Board of Public Welfare yesterday announced that its hands are clean in the Gallinger Hospital muddle when Chairman Frederick W. McReynolds informed "the press of Washington" that Congress has consistently slashed fiscal estimates for the institution.

Regarding the implication, carried in McReynolds' spirited statement, that the hospital might well have been kept under the Welfare Board instead of being transferred to the Health Department last July 1, Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen had the following to say last night:

"I am still strongly of the opinion, as I always have been, that the municipal hospital and tuberculosis sanatoria should be where they are—under the Health Department."

McReynolds attached to his statement a table comparing estimates recommended by the Board of Public Welfare for operation of Gallinger with actual appropriations for the last six years. They show that, while Congress approved the expenditure of $250,000 in 1933 and $290,000 in 1935 for an isolation ward, it killed the board's request for a $750,000 obstetrical annex in 1936, a $60,000 item to take over Columbia Hospital for obstetrical purposes in 1937 and a desired allotment of $51,320 to convert the Upshur street tuberculosis hospital into an obstetrical ward during the present fiscal year.

"Requests were continually made for additional orderlies, nurses, social service workers and other personnel, beyond the amounts, which were appropriated," McReynolds declared.

"If the appropriations which were recommended by the Board of Public Welfare had been made in full there is no question but what Gallinger Hospital would now have been in good shape and the difficulties which have recently been described in the public press would not have appeared.

"Those difficulties are entirely due to inadequate personnel, inadequate maintenance funds and lack of space for the care of patients, all of which would have been rectified if the appropriations recommended by the Board of Public Welfare had been approved by the various authorities through whose hands District of Columbia proposals must pass."

These authorities are the Commissioners, the Bureau of the Budget and the Senate and House sub-committees on District finances.

Chairman McReynolds expressed the board's "utmost confidence" in Gallinger's superintendent, Dr. Edgar A. Bocock, "whom it regards as one of the ablest hospital administrators in the United States, and who has accomplished marvels with inadequate funds and inadequate personnel."

At no time indicating what or whose attack upon the Welfare Board was being answered, McReynolds said it was untrue that the hospital's estimates have been slashed in the past because too much was demanded.

"Every cent that was asked for Gallinger Municipal Hospital and for any other of the institutions and agencies has been thoroughly justified, and, if appropriated, would have been spent with economy, with efficiency and with the utmost constructive value," he asserted.

That Gallinger has been run economically is shown, he continued, by a comparison of per capita costs. During the fiscal year ended last June 30 it cost the District $2.14 a day per patient in Gallinger, wheres, the per capita expense was $3.91 at Freedmen's and $5.97 at Children's, with which the District has contractual relations.

"The contrast," McReynolds said, "implies no criticism of these other hospitals, but does show that Gallinger has been able to accomplish the highly creditable results which it has secured under very difficult circumstances only by the utmost economy and by the most painstaking attention to detail.

"Recent criticisms, insofar as they are true, are the inevitable results of the inadequacies of the appropriations that were made."

Mme. Dieckhoff Hostess To Diplomatic Wives

Mmes. Rajamaitri, Hurban and Saito Among Callers at Charming Home on Massachusetts Avenue.

Frau Dieckhoff, wife of the German Ambassador, entertained friends at an "at home" yesterday afternoon at the residence at 2929 Massachusetts avenue, which she and the Ambassador have leased for the winter.

The hostess received in a small living room, which opens into a large dining room. She wore a black crepe frock with a lame inset at the waist, and a small string of pearls. Assisting her during the afternoon were the wives of several members of the embassy staff.

The table in the dinning room was decorated with a silver bowl filled with pink roses, and there were chrysanthemums on flower stands in other parts of the room. The walls and ceiling are beautifully carved in a simple design, and a great crystal chandelier hangs from the ceiling.

The house belongs to Count and Countess Lazsio Szechenyi. The Dieckhoffs are occupying it until the new embassy is built. It is expected that ground will be broken in the spring for the new edifice.

Those who called to pay their respects yesterday included Mme. Rajamaitri, wife of the Siamese Minister; Mme. Hurban wife of the Czechoslovakian Minister (she wore a fuschia colored gown with matching hat); the Counselor of the Czechoslovakian Legation and Mme. Brejska, the latter dressed in black; Miss Mary Randolph, and Mme. Saito, wife of the Japanese Ambassador, who left immediately upon the arrival of the Misses Wang, picturesque daughters of the Chinese Ambassador, who wore the colorful costume of their country.

The food served during the afternoon included thin little sandwiches of meat and cheese, cakes and bonbons.

Among those present from the German Embassy were Frau Scholz, in a brown satin frock with a hat of a deeper shade; Frau Herbert Blankerhorn and Frau von Stolzmann.

Diplomats See Pre-Columbian Art Exhibition

Dr. Ernesto Franco Tells History of Hundreds of Objects.

A sizable section of diplomatic Washington spent part of yesterday at the National Museum, where the exhibition of pre-Columbian art from Peru, Ecuador and Venezuela was opened. The display will be continued through December.

Among the guests were Senora de los Rios, wife of the Spanish Ambassador; Fulvio de Suvich, Italian Ambassador; Dr. Francisco Castillo Najera, Ambassador of Mexico; Dr. Adrian Recinos, Minister of Guatemala, and Capt. Umberto Cugia, of the Italian Embassy.

The Counselor of the Polish Embassy arrived with Mme. Wankowicz, who wore a black coat trimmed with Persian lamb and a dark blue dress with a high collar of silver lame. Others present were the Minister of the Dominican Republic and Senora de Pastoriza; Gabriel de Gramont, Attache of the French Embassy; Dr. Rafael Fuentes, First Secretary of the Mexican Embassy; Dr. Pedro Arcaya, former Minister of Venezuela, and Mme. Arcaya, and Dr. William Mann and Keith Merrill.

Friday Supper Club Party Gay

Many Dinners Precede Dance Which Opens Fourteenth Season.

It was a gala evening last night for members of the Friday Evening Supper Club. They inaugurated their fourteenth season—and that is quite a long time in transient Washington—with a dance at the Willard Hotel.

Many dinners preceded the event, among them one at which Mrs. John Allan Daugherty was hostess. Her guests were Senator Arthur Capper, Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Frederick W. Coleman, Col. Edward Clifford, Mr. and Mrs. Emil Hurja, Mr. and Mrs. John McClure, Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Kremer, Maj. and Mrs. Parker West and Mrs. Jacob Leander Loose. Others who gave dinners before the dance were Mrs. William Jennings Price, Mrs. Edward Wilbur and Mrs. Craig King, who entertained friends at the Columbia Country Club.

Receiving last evening were the members of the committee: Senora de Recinos, wife of the Guatemalan Minister; Senora de Pastoriza, wife of the Minister of the Dominican Republic; Senora de Alfaro, wife of the former President of Panama; Senora de Baron, wife of the Counselor of the Cuban Embassy; Mrs. William King, Mrs. Ralph O. Clifford, Lewis Lofton Moneyway, Dr. Stanley K. Hornbeck and Franklin Roudybush.

Originally called the Twenty-two Club, after the number of the home of the late Mrs. Thomas Walsh, on Massachusetts avenue, this group first met there at the invitation of Mrs. Walsh. After her death, the club decided to continue the dances at the Willard.

Members will entertain at a Dutch treat dinner on New Year's eve.

About the Town

With Dudley Harmon

MARY COOTES would have made the ideal Jules Verne heroine. So far almost the only place she has not been is 20,000 leagues under the sea. Continually bouncing off to foreign lands, Mary has already been around the world once; studied in Paris for a year, ridden astride a camel in the Sahara desert, done translating work in Portugal, skiied in Germany, played championship tennis in Japan and flown by airplane over parts of China.

DUDLEY HARMON.

Now the much-traveled daughter of Col. and Mrs. Harry Cootes, of Alexandria, is off again on another lengthy jaunt. This one will take her first to Cairo, where she will do another translating job for the State Department. Then she expects to join up with Gracyn Wheeler, fourth ranking United States tennis player (Mary is District champion) for a tennis tour. They hope to play in the Egyptian Nationals at Cairo, the Greek Nationals in Athens, and more tournaments in Rome and Naples. They will wind up their circuit in Wimbledon in June. Miss Wheeler is a member of next year's Wightman Cup team, but Mary Cootes says modestly that she herself "only hopes to qualify for play" at the great English contest.

Mary gets all these translating jobs by virtue of having majored in French at Smith College. She spent her junior year studying at the Sorbonne, and knows Spanish and German as well as she does English and French.

* * * *

HEADING THE State Department delegation to the Cairo conference is Francis DeWolfe, radio expert, who will be accompanied by Mrs. DeWolfe. Miss Cootes will have a fellow translator in Miss Sally Holmes, enterprising daughter of Rear Admiral and Mrs. Ralston Holmes, who has a job with the department. The whole party expects to sail January 4 on the liner Exeter, which goes direct to Alexandria in Egypt. The DeWolfes will return in about four months.

This will be their second such trip in one year—it must be nice to work for the State Department. Last summer they went to Paris, where Mr. DeWolfe attended an international conference on radio.

ODDS AND ENDS: Nancy Leiter is giving a dinner next Friday for Richard Griffin, son of Mrs. Paul Bastedo, and his fiancee, Miss Victoire Conley. Later, she will take her guests to the Friday Evening Supper Club, at the Sulgrave . . . Reeve Lewis entertained at a cocktail party yesterday.

PEOPLE ARE always complaining that they don't know what the other fellow uses for money in these days after the recent crash, but certain it is that the New York gayety centers are more crowded now than for years. A packed house turned out to greet Adelaide Moffett Brooks when she made her debut the other evening as a singer in the Trianon Room of the Ambassador Hotel. Despite the fact that her stern father, former Federal housing administrator, once forbade her even to toy with the idea of torch singing, Mrs. Brooks has carried on—and at her debut demonstrated a talent which was at least passable. This is more than can be said for some society nightclub chanteuses, who never seem quite sure of what to do with their hands, to say nothing of their voices.

Sub-Deb Whirl Begins Dec. 20

Parties for School-Age Set Will Rival Those of Older Group.

While Washington debutantes during the coming holidays will be busy tearing from one party to another, trying to cram all of them into a crowded schedule, the sub-debs and the sub-subdebs will not be lagging far behind.

No sooner will be boys and girls of prep school age reach home from schools near and far than they will be "on the go" morning, noon and night. Dinners and dances planned for this younger group rival the debutante parties in both social prominence and beauty of surroundings.

In the sub-deb category will be the party to be given December 29 by Mr. and Mrs. Albert Cushing Reed for their daughter, Betty. The evening before, December 28, there will be Mrs. William J. Flather's party for Georgiana Flather.

Even earlier than that, however, the sub-deb calendar will get under way in a whirl. Mrs. James Lawrence Houghteling will give a dinner for a number of lucky girls and boys before Mrs. Lloyd Shippen's annual sub-debutante dance to be hel dthis year at the Shoreham on December 20.

One of the most important of the "sub-sub" dances will be that of "The Committee," to take place on December 22, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles C. Glover. Incidentally, "The Committee" is composed of some of the most outstanding women in Washington, including Mrs. Dean Acheson, Mrs. Wayne Chatfied-Taylor, Mrs. James Clement Dunn, Mrs. William J. Flather, Mrs. Glover, Mrs. Herbert Seymour Howard, Mrs. Reginald Huidekoper, Mrs. Keith Merrill, Mrs. Theodore Wilkinson and Mrs. Richard Wilmer.

Another dance for the sub-sub set will be given by The Macneil of Barr... and Mrs. Robert Lister Macneil for the latter's son, Frederick Hicks, on December 27, at the Sulgrave Club.

Other parties for girls and boys of this age group will be given by Mr. and Mrs. William Chapin Huntington, who will have a dinner for Edith Huntington on December 30, and Mrs. Edward Finkenstaedt, who will entertain at a tea for her daughter, Sita, December 29.

Peace Called Big Issue in World Today

Strife Means Setback of 1,000 Years, Says Miss Rankin.

Ex-Member of Congress Addresses Women in Chevy Chase.

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

Nothing is so important in the world today as the prevention of another war, Jeanette Rankin told the civic section of the Chevy Chase Woman's Club yesterday in the Chevy Chase Presbyterian Church. If we go to war again, we shall not recover for 1,000 years, she asserted, urging the women to study the subject and form their own opinions, guarding against the influence of war propaganda.

Miss Rankin, who was the first woman member of Congress and voted against this country's entrance into the World War, admitted she was a propagandist in the cause of peace. She pointed out that public opinion was molded unconsciously by subtle war propaganda not recognized as such. As an example, she cited the sweeping public indignation at Japan's invasion of China.

Granting that the tactics of the Japanese deserved condemnation, she contrasted the public sympathy for China now with that of a few years ago, when 100,000 were dying of starvation. There was no propaganda then as there is now, and the plight of the 100,000 stirred less feeling in this country than that of the comparatively few thousand war victims now, she asserted.

Our Problem Unique.

"No country in the world has the same problem of sifting out propaganda that we have here," she went on. "We must learn to form our own opinions. After that it is only a matter of using the mechanism of law and government to express them. What we believe is the only important thing."

Miss Rankin urged the women to question their Representatives in Congress as to their stand on vital issues. She declared most districts had better Representatives than they deserved because the citizens took little intelligent interest in the activities on Capitol Hill.

"There is actually no difference in parties," she said. "I am not interested in parties; it's women's job to act on principle. Today we have hungry children in a world where there is enough to eat. We have had hungry children in the world before but it has been because there was not enough food. Whatever concerns children is a problem for women; it's the women's job to see that the food goes around."

"Responsible To Us."

"We should let our Representatives realize they are responsible to the people of this country, and make our Presidents understand it is much more important to answer to the people of the United States than to go along with the rulers of other countries."

Miss Rankin was introduced by Mrs. William F. Henry, chairman of resolutions and legislation for the civics section, of which Mrs. Edward Helmuth is head. Preceding her talk, William S. Canning, consulting engineer of Pennsylvania's new division of traffic, discussed the importance of uniform traffic signals and regulations. The wheels of automobiles know no political boundary lines, he said, and rules of the road, signs and signals should be of such a degree of uniformity that they will convey the same meaning to the operator, no matter where he is from.

Women Voters Fight Patronage

League Backs O'Mahoney Against McKellar Bill on Postmasters.

The National League of Women voters through its president, Miss Marguerite M. Wells, today issued a statement urging vigorous and universal public support of the movement led by Senator Joseph C O'Mahoney of Wyoming to prevent the passage of the McKellar bill which would put postmasterships by law under patronage by Congress.

After the McKellar bill was reported favorably by the Senate Postoffice Committee Tuesday, Senators M. M. Logan of Kentucky and Robert M. LaFollette, Jr. of Wisconsin joined Senator O'Mahoney in signing a minority report urging the substitution of the Ramspeck bill taking postmasters out of patronage for the McKellar bill, which was reported by the majority of the committee.

"Senator O'Mahoney" said Miss Wells' statement, "and the two other senators who followed his lead in recommending that the Ramspeck postmasters bill be substituted for the McKellar bill designed to insure postmastership patronage to the Congress have paved the way for a Senate showdown on the patronage system. The record of the Senate in the past few years on the subject of patronage indicates that the committee vote of 9 to 4 in favor of reporting the McKellar patronage bill is in proportion to the patronage sentiment in that body. Senator H. Styles Bridges of New Hampshire and the senators signing the minority report were the only one voting against the bill in committee.

"The issue between patronage and merit will be clearly drawn when the Senate is faced with the choice between the Ramspeck bill, placing postmasterships under the civil service, and the McKellar bill insuring their appointment under the patronage system."

"Madame Chairman" . . .

MRS. IRVING FAIRWEATHER, newly-elected national president of the American War Mothers, was guest of honor last night at a reception given by Washington chapters at the national headquarters on New Hampshire avenue. The party was intended as a surprise, but, as it was given in what is now her home, plans for it couldn't very well be kept from the guest of honor.

Mrs. Fairweather came to Washington from her home in Wallace, Idaho, October 23. She will make her residence here at the national headquarters during the two years of her term, as did Mrs. Howard C. Boone, of Kansas City, immediate past president. She has visited in the Capital on many occasions, but had never resided here.

The War Mothers, of whom there are 10,000 in the organization, are stressing patriotic education in their program this year besides carrying on the work which is their primary object—caring for dependent mothers.

Mrs. Amelia Thiele, past State president of the District, was in charge of arrangements for last night's reception, at which Mrs. Emil Walters, new State president, also was honored. The District of Columbia, Bicentennial and Admiral Koontz Chapters joined in the affair.

The Professional Writers Club of the Y. W. C. A. will launch formally its campaign to arouse public sentiment for preservation of Decatur House with a broadcast at 6:30 o'clock Wednesday evening over Radio Station WJSV. There will be a distinguished group of speakers on the program, with Miss Myrta Ethel Cawood, president of the club, as master of ceremonies.

Holland, director of the fine arts division of the Library of Congress, on "The Architectural Significance of Decatur House;" Mrs. William Lee Corbin, president of the Y. W. C. A., on "Decatur House: An Inspiration to Youth;" Mme. Cantacuzene, on "The Spirit of Decatur House," and Mrs. Lee Roberts Pennington, jr., historian of the District of Columbia D. A. R., on "Decatur House: A National Shrine."

The Writers Club has issued announcements of the program with letters requesting heads of organizations to accquaint members with the movement to preserve the house and enlist their interest. The Decatur House committee includes C. Virginia Diedel, chairman; Nell V. Smith, Marie Bockoven Louise M. Kline, Katheryn M. Doherty, Florence A. Dieterich and Helen L. Hector.

Enclosed with the letter is a list of American buildings, made by the Historic American Buildings Survey of places it deemed worthy of permanent protection. It includes, first, Bacon's Castle, Surrey County, Va.; second, Fort Sumter, Charleston Harbor, S. C.; third, Rene Beauregard House Chalmette, La., and fourth, Stephen Decatur House, Washington. The others are India Wharf, Boston; Derby Wharf., Salem, Mass.; Shirley-Eustis House, Dorchester, Mass.; Whitehall near Annapolis; the Kloster, of Ephrata Pa., and Scotchtown, Hanover County, Va.

SO—a plan must be found to make practical the slogan, "Save Decatur House!"

Soroptimists Donate Books

Members of the Soroptimist Club yesterday with a simple ceremony, presented to the Home for Incurables a new library of 310 volumes—books contributed by members of the club. The board of managers of the home, members of the staff and many of the patients were present. Mrs. E. R. Finkenstaedt, president of the board, formally accepted the library which was presented in behalf of the club by Miss Daisy Reed, Soroptimist president.

Miss Reed outlined objectives of the Soroptimist Club and explained significance of the name which means "the best for women." Among civic projects which the club has carried out she mentioned establishment of similar libraries in the Glenn Dale Sanitarium for adults and the Women's Bureau of the Police Department, of which Captain Rhoda Milliken is head. That at Glenn Dale was installed in 1935 and that in the Women's Bureau last year.

Among other services to the community, she listed the club's contributions to the Community Chest, the Washington Criminal Justice Association, Camp Bennett, the Children's Hospital and the Children's Emergency Home. Its chief activities in addition to weekly luncheon meetings and other social gatherings, are of a philanthropic or civic nature. It also maintains scholarships in college and business training and in the Marjorie Webster School.

Those from the club who were present at the presentation, in addition to Miss Reed, included Miss Marjorie Webster, a past president; Mrs. Mary Lewis, also a past president of the Washington Club and a former officer of the American Federation of Soroptimist Clubs; Miss Elva McNamara, chairman of the civic committee, who was in charge of assembling the books, and Miss Emma A. Buechele, chairman of the publicity committee.

The books for the library have been collected over a period of nearly a year. Members took the volumes—most of them new— to meetings, left them at Miss McNamara's home or gave her money for their purchase. Each book contains a plate bearing the name of the club. A brass plaque, donated by Miss Reed, is on the case, showing it to be the gift of the Soroptimist Club.

A tea followed the ceremony yesterday with members of the board of managers as hostesses. Mrs. C. A. Richmond, vice president, poured. Among others there was Mrs. Arthur Chichester, chairman of the library committee, who first conveived the idea of having a library for the institution. One was started years ago, but most of the volumes are now old and dull, she said, and therefore, patients had expressed tirely new library from which to choose reading material. Mrs. Jean Hale is the librarian who will have charge of the library which the Soroptimists expect to replenish with new books from time to time.

Alley to Be Scene of Pageant Depicting Shepherds' Coming

Colored Children to Take Part in Christmas Program Sponsored by Women's Council of Church Federation.

Three-and-a-Half street court, between Third and Fourth and F and G streets northeast, will be the scene of a pageant depicting the coming of the Shepherds to worship the Christ Child this Christmas Eve. The pageant will be presented in as lowly a setting as that to which the Wise Men were led by the star on the first Christmas, and will be part of the alley program sponsored by the Woman's Council of the Federation of Churches in co-operation with the committee on the lighting of the National Christmas Tree.

Miss Naomi Hewitt, cousin of the Rev. Dr. Clifford Jope, of Ninth Street Christian Church, and director of the church dramatic club, is writing and staging the pageant, in which colored children of the alley will take part. It is in keeping with the plan of the Woman's Council, under the leadership of Miss Etta Mai Russell, its Juvenile Court worker, to take the Christmas spirit to the alley dwellers rather than to take the children to an auditorium to see a pageant and then return them to their bleak surroundings.

Miss Hewitt plans to enlist the help of the mothers in Three-and-half street court in making costumes. Fathers and older brothers will help to construct the simple manger.

The church is arranging a Christmas observance in three alleys. It also will have its own pageant, written and directed by Miss Hewitt, the Sunday before Christmas.

Miss Hewitt came here from Boston last spring, and has been directing the drama group of the church since. Children of the church will present a radio play at 6:30 p. m., December 17, in connection with the alley Christmas program, WJSV broadcasts telling of the alley project, which The Washington Post again will aid by collecting toys, will be started Monday at 4:10 p. m. with a greeting from Mrs. Frank A. Linzel, president of the Woman's Council.

Mrs. Thomas J. Howerton, Juvenile Court chairman, under whose department Miss Russell's work is carried on, is working out details of the Christmas observance. Other broadcasts will be presented next Wednesday and Friday and the following Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

Radio programs are not a new field for Miss Hewitt either in drama or music. She was the first cellist in this country to broadcast a program. She has played as soloist with the Boston Symphony, was a member of the Boston Woman's Orchestra, and has done extensive concert work. She also is a graduate of the Emerson School of Dramatic Art, and has had wide experience as a director of amateur groups. The junior choir of the church, under the direction of Dr. Jope, will participate in the radio program she is preparing for December 17.

Eight and Forty Dinner Tonight

Legion Women's Auxiliary Group to Hold Twelfth Annual Affair.

The twelfth annual birthday dinner and dance of the Eight and Forty will be given tonight at the Continental Hotel at 7 o'clock. The color scheme of the decorations will be red and white, the colors of the organization, and will be further carried out in the uniforms of the officers, who will wear their white evening gowns, red capes and red chapeaux with white plumes.

Le Chapeau Departemental, Mrs. John McCabe, will preside, assisted by the entertainment chairman, Mrs. Martin Dyer. Dancing will follow the dinner.

The distinguished guests will be Ferdinand G. Fraser, national Chef de Chemin de Fer, Forty et Eight; Grande Chef de Gare John McCabe, Department Commander Thomas Mason, jr., and Mrs. Mason; National Executive Committeeman Joseph Malloy and Mrs. Malloy; Miss Hazel Boyce, secretary of the American Legion, and the department president of District of Columbia department, the American Legion Auxiliary, Mrs. Dorothy B. Harper, who is also Le Chapeau National Passe.

La Boutique de Huit Chapeaux et Femmes, which is the Eight and Forty, was organized by a number of leading auxiliary women, including the first national president and the first national secretary, at a meeting of the American Legion Auxiliary's national executive committee in Indianapolis, in June, 1922. The District of Columbia Salon was organized on December 5, 1925, the first meeting having been at the Lee House. Mrs. Irene Arnold was appointed organizer of D. C. Departmental by the National Chapeau. The early records show that a program of child welfare promotion was adopted and, in 1933, the American Legion assigned the Eight and Forty a special program of prevention of tuberculosis among children, which is now its major program. Local members will be seen during the drive for the sale of the Christmas tuberculosis seals at the Benjamin Franklin Postoffice, assisting daily.

The department Christmas tree that is sponsored each year by the D. C. Department of the American Legion will be decorated by the Eight and Forty girls, as usual, and the Forty and Eight will provide the tree for the Legion.

Plans are being made for the distribution of many baskets to needy families of World War veterans during the Christmas holidays and the presentation of gifts to all children of World War veterans who are at the Episcopal Home for Children on Nebraska avenue. A Christmas party is also given each year in the tubercular ward for Children at Gallinger Hospital.

Xi Chapter, Iota Tau Tau national legal sorority, will hold its non-rush tea tomorrow from 4 to 7 p. m. at the Wardman Park Hotel for the freshmen of National University and the Washington College of Law.

Prior to the tea, Miss Fannye Neyman, connected with the Federal Communications Commission as principal attorney in the litigation section of the broadcasting division, will be initiated into the sorority as an honorary member.

An interesting feature of the afternoon will be a talk by Mrs. Charlotte A. Hankin, a graduate of Radcliffe College and of George Washington University and an outstanding member of the District Bar, on the "Bench and Bar of Europe."

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

How to Get Rid of Paramour Is Problem Faithless Husband Takes to His Wife; She Asks Advice.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: About two months ago my husband's conscience bothered him so much that he voluntarily told me he had been keeping serious company for the past seven months with a woman who works in the store of which he is manager. I was shocked, of course—but won't go into the suffering it caused me. We had been most happily married for 13 years and have three lovely children, ranging in ages from 6 to 12 years. This woman has done everything in her power to break up our home, but I have remained steadfast, patient and loving.

* * * *

Now, here is the problem—two nights ago my husband begged me desperately to help him get rid of this woman. He is tired of her, wants to drop her and live a clean life again; but he is afraid to tell her because she could make it very unpleasant for him at the store. I can't bring myself to the level of calling on her, and I don't know what to do. He has let me read some of the letters she has written him, and you never read such letters—pouring out her love for him. He showed me personal gifts she has given him. In fact, according to him, she has literally thrown herself at him; certainly she has been the aggressor.

* * * *

I don't mean to excuse my husband. He has told me this is not his first extra-marital affair and I daresay it will not be his last. He seems to be drawn to all women. But why can't this woman see that my husband wants to be rid of her? He is making no move toward divorce and has tried to show her how he feels by spacing their dates farther and farther apart. Men can't really love a woman who would carry on such an affair with them; they only want what promises—at first—to be a good time.

* * * *

I thought my love for my husband was dead but it must still exist, for I want to help him out of this mess. How can he break off his affair with this woman of whom he seems to be afraid? Any suggestion you can give him or me will be greatly appreciated. Very truly yours. M. H. T.

The Graceful Getaway.

DEAR M. H. T.: Since your husband lacks the ruthless courage to break off this affair with the same high-handed disregard for consequences he displayed in entering into it, I suppose the graceful way out, for him, is to give up the lady with a gesture of noble, sorrowful, sacrificial renunciation. He might tell her the relationship as it exists today is tearing him to pieces; that it is wrecking his health and affecting his work; that he has come to a crossroad in his life where he realizes he must make an irrevocable choice between duty and desire; and that—alas him and for her!—he realizes the ties of duty are strongest.

* * * *

He might tell her, in the words of the poet, Lovelace, "I could not love thee, dear, so much, lov'd I not honour more." He can tactfully omit any reference to his affection for and dependence upon his wife, and dwell touchingly upon his little children's need of both a father's and mother's love and protection. He can explain that she, fine woman that she is, must surely recognize the rights of little children as coming before that of two adults caught in the toils of a hopeless passion. In taking away his companionship he can give her in its place the illusion of a perfect love that might have been were it not for cruel circumstance. In so doing, he will be making his getaway without taking the ground completely from under her feet. He will be leaving her some small platform to stand on; some rock of reassurance to cling to in the mental and emotional chaos that no doubt will be hers when she hears their affair is at an end.

* * * *

A woman's heart is a curious thing. It rallies heroically to the necessity for renouncing tangible things, if intangible things remain; where it rebels stubbornly, fiercely at merely being rejected in toto.

* * * *

What your husband is afraid of, I suppose, is that the woman will go to pieces involuntarily when and if he tries to cast her off; that, desperate and driven with passionate need, she may involuntarily create scenes and make threats. If their affair has had any element of genuine regard, it is not likely she would deliberately attempt to jeopardize his professional standing as a gesture of cold-blooded revenge; nor is it likely he would impute such meanness to her.

* * * *

Perhaps he only feels she cannot live without him and will not want to. But he should have given some consideration to that eventuality before he embarked on the intrigue. As I said here some weeks ago—no person has the moral right to make the slightest gesture toward invading another's emotional reserve unless he is prepared to assume full responsibility for what may be the far-flung, perhaps life-lasting, consequences of that invasion. But a married man of the philandering variety seldom looks that far ahead when he reaches after forbidden fruit.

* * * *

As a matter of fact, it is consideration for the woman, rather more than for your husband, which prompts me to suggest an expedient handling of this very delicate and trying situation. What husbands of this type should be told by their wives, when they come panting to cover, asking to be defended from the aggressive wooing of their erstwhile fancied prey, is: "Well, you got yourself into this without consulting me, and I can only suggest that you get yourself out of it as best you can." Having said as much, the wife should stand aside in mild derision. Such an attitude would probably go farther toward curbing her husband's extra-marital sorties than any other.

* * * *

It is possible your husband's anxiety to be rid of this woman is prompted not so much by his desire to "lead a clean life," as because he has seen still another woman whom he fancies more. It's problematic whether you are rendering him any real service in defending him too valiantly from the possible embarrassing consequences of this adventure. It might teach him a lasting lesson if he got his fingers burned and nobody seemed to care; his wife least of all. M. H.

Color Accents White for Cruise and Resort

Unusual Fabrics Are Featured in Resort Collections.

By Ethel Ehlen.
The Post Fashion Editor.

NEWS in the realm of casual dresses for cruise and resort wear which will carry on through spring and summer is in the fabric rather than the styling. Novelty weaves and materials are much in evidence in silks, rayons, linens and cottons, as evidenced in the New York market collections which will appear in Washington stores soon. Waffle weaves, stripes, printed chiffon, rough and smooth textures, distinguish many of the silk materials.

In the realm of rayons, there are fabrics which have the appearance of silks and those which look like coarse linens; the sacking range is among the most popular. Cottons are printed and striped in unique color combinations, emphasizing brilliant tones; linens are both heavy and sheer and the majority are crush-resistant. Trimming is tremendously important for resort wear and spring; both light and darker materials are accented with buttons, belts, stitching or scarfs, in dramatic contrast.

Gypsy stripes and Mexican prints are appearing in all fabrics. Boleros top dresses of every description; jacket-like blouses add character to two-piece costumes. According to cruise previews, sunback dresses will be again in the picture next summer, but in an entirely new type of styling. Suede is used as a dramatic accent for both cottons and silks—belts, buttons and modernistic flat posies at the throat in lieu of pins or clips. Pockets abound throughout the entire cruise wardrobe; odd-shaped pockets placed up near the neckline are considered the smartest interpretation. Pleated skirts are a "must"—this applies to both loose pleats and those which are stitched. In contrast to the straight-line silhouette which is very popular, there are dresses echoing the corseted silhouette of this winter; fine tucks defining waistlines in molded effects. In every instance, skirts are shorter, the average length being from 14 to 15 inches from the ground. The casual cruise mode is gay and young, with smart simplicity as the predominating factor.

Here is the popular bolero topping a one-piece dress, in white twill-surfaced rayon trimmed with green and white dots. The green note is repeated in the felt hat by Louise Sanders and white leather bag by David Lewis.

Saltsacking fashions the two-piece dress above; white trimmed with brown. Note high neckline, high-placed pockets and intricate stitching. Hat, bag and gloves repeat the stitched accents; gloves designed by Chanut. Dress also available in aqua, rose and blue.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes

New York, Dec. 3.

AS SOON as the frost gets constant here—and the fodder would be in the shock if we had any fodder—the White Russians get busy with their social season. Twenty years since they lost their nation, and a small but colorful group of them here give party after party, intermarry, dress up and light up the local social scene.

ALICE HUGHES.

They are great on benefit balls and parties—these flourishing survivals of the old regime. Their first this year was for the widows and children of the Tsar's former naval officers, and the whole colony turned out in its fanciest clothes, surrounded by hundreds of good Americans who are always on hand to enjoy the quaint old-worldliness of the White Russians. There was a whole posse of princesses of various grades, such as Nina, Chavchavadze, Rostilav, Gagarin, Scherbatoff, Aristoff, Obolensky and so on. These parties are so numerous during our winter that I think they must run through all the Russian folk festivals twice a year, and perhaps think up new ones!

Hot upon the benefit ball came the first big Russian wedding of the season, uniting in Greek Orthodox style Mme. Leda Utgoff and Baron Charles Philip von Wrangel. The ceremony took place in the modest little Russian Church of Christ the Savior, at Madison avenue and 121st street. Our socialionesses go heavily for the ceremonial quaintness of these weddings, too—everyone carrying a lighted taper, and so on. Another Baron Wrangel, this one named George, was best man, and the little church was packed with well-wishers.

Ah well, there will always be some color in our drab Gotham lives as long as the descendants of the old guard Russians hold on to wed and throw parties!

* * * *

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Mary Lewis, the store tycoon, tells me that a California label on a fashion is now as important as was one by Chanel ten years ago—an interesting admission, as showing that Hollywood has at last snatched its long-awaited spot in the style sun.

* * * *

Already the head men are getting out handsome brochures on our world's fair of 1939—and I was shocked and appalled to note that the latest, a beauty, listed not one woman's name as helping to plan, shape the policy or design the big show. This is utterly ridiculous, and I hope the boys just forgot to list them.

* * * *

I'm always on the receiving end of new gadgets, and the latest is a spir-it pin—a handsome gold ornament which can be taken off the chest and used to spear the olive or cherry in the cocktail—provided one drinks cocktails. I suppose teetotallers can use the doo-dad to fight off advances.

* * * *

Gloria ("Mimi") Baker, most publicized glamour maiden among the '37 debutante class, is quitting us just as the deb season races into high, and goes to Palm Beach with her mother, Mrs. Margaret Emerson. My spouse snorts at the glamour claims made for "Mimi," as his favorite deb in Miss Edwina Atwell, a beauty. He stands outside fancy night clubs hoping to see her, the poor dolt!

* * * *

Elsa Maxwell, the rotund party-genius, has gone South, too, but we are bearing up nobly, knowing that she will come back and plot some new shinnanigans.

* * * *

Fred Astaire has been holidaying in town lately, the dance-genius from Omaha being between pictures. He says that Fred, jr., is already interested in the dance, at the age of 2. "When he hears music," says the proud pop, "he rattles around a bit!" Well, he'll have to do a lot of ratting to ever equal his dad!

* * * *

Well, they're finally redressed the 40 girls in "The Women" for the winter, and the bill came to $10,000. Margalo Gillmore wears things suitable to the lovely but deluded wife, while Ilka Chase, as the sophisticated cat, has frocks fitted to her personality. Betty Lawford, the blonde Other Woman, has some sirenish clothes that befit her depredations! What a job, and how well done!

Five Famous Women Agree On Best Traits

List Grooming and Stamina Among Attributes of the Successful.

WHAT qualities should a young woman possess to succeed in the business world?

Five famous women listed in "Polly Tucker, Merchant," a new book by Sara Pennoyer, fashion promotion director of Bonwit Teller, unanimously agreed on the following qualifications as necessary for success. A well-groomed appearance, enthusiasm, stamina, an ability to take a lot of punishment and to work under pressure without confusion and irritation.

As to appearance, Miss Dorothy Shaver, first vice president and director of Lord and Taylor, says: "A girl should know how to dress neatly, appropriately and in good taste. Her taste should not be limited solely by the campus viewpoint.

"Furthermore," continued Miss Shaver, " a girl should have learned to make her social contact in such a manner that she can make a good immediate impression, get her ideas across in a straightforward manner with little self-consciousness and few districting mannerisms. Her personality should be free from problems and conflict; a mature, outgoing, extroverted personality, with a good sense of reality and an objective viewpoint.

Winifred Ovitte, fashion editor of Women's Daily Wear, gives timely advice to those girls interested in the fashion field when she says, "You don't have to be the most wonderful girl in the world, but you must have real enthusiasm and a zest for work. And along with a desire for work you must cultivate a social spirit, a knowledge of, or sympathy with all the activities of current life, if you expect to succeed in buying or planning, selling or writing advertising copy.

Anybody, or practically anybody, can learn to write advertising, according to Bernice Fitz-Gibon, publicity director of John Wanamaker, who is famous from coast to coast as the creator of Mary's "smart-to-be thrifty" copy. All you have to do to be successful in this field, she maintains, is to learn to look at the world around you with zest. Acquire the necessary technical skill with which to transfer that zest to paper.

For those girls interested in specialty-shop designing, special training is necessary, explained Margaret Macy, advertising and display director of Bergdorf Goodman and Delman. She also suggests modeling as a side entry. For this type of store you need a personal, rather than a popular slant.

If you can answer yes to these questions of Estelle Hamburger, vice president of Jay-Thorpe, you will reach the top in selling, otherwise you are not fitted for a sales woman.

"Have you a 'work sense,' doing not only the job that is asked of you, but doing what you think it takes?"

"Have you pride, and are you eager to put a bit of yourself into whatever you do?"

"Have you a sense of appreciation of lovely things, for line, for texture for color?

"Have you the sense to use what you learn, and when you don't know, do you know how to find out?"

Tips From Stars On Adding Inches

If you are a small girl attempting to add imaginary inches to your height to create the illusion of tallness, you might well adopt a few of the methods employed by the petite movie stars—Anita Louise and Bette Davis, who are 5 feet 3 inches in height.

Anita recommends several ruses which she practices herself. One is to wear high heels, but choose shoes so conservative that no attention is attracted to the height of the heel. Another important item is to choose dresses that have slim lines. All of Miss Louise's street clothes are made with tubular skirts, and many of her evening gowns have molded lines. Slender, vertical stripes also create an optical delusion of greater length. High unaccented necklines add height as well as high-crowned hats.

Besides tricks of the wardrobe, Bette Davis recommends special attention to coiffure arrangement, for this often will add or subtract several inches.

TODAY'S HEALTH TALK

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

Follow-Up System.

It is unfortunately necessary in the conduct of human affairs at times to refer frankly to situations which ordinarily are not discussed. But, however objectionable these things may be to many people, progress can be made in some enterprises only by facing the facts, and certainly progress has been made in the conquest of tuberculosis by a courageous acknowledgement of the situation that exists, and especially it has been made by the co-operation of those who have discovered and who acknowledge that they have the disease.

The eradication of tuberculosis, an object which is possibly going to be accomplished within the generation of young people now alive, will be accomplished by identifying every person who has the disease: it is the prime idea of experts that when one case of tuberculosis is discovered, the household in which it was discovered must be examined in order to see whether any other person there has the disease, because we know that at present the most prolific means of spread of tuberculosis is by contact from person to person.

Consider how little our grandfathers knew about the spread of this disease. In the eighteenth century, Portal, professor of medicine at the College of France, said: "In the Journal of Paris it was reported in the year 1780 that a young man 20 years old had contracted tuberculosis by using the belongings and especially a fur coat of his father, who had died of tuberculosis. Would it not be more natural, instead of this, to think that the child had inherited the disease from which his father had died, a disease which also had carried off four of his uncles and that he had died of hereditary tuberculosis? And yet this observation, which furnishes so slight a proof that tuberculosis is contagious, has been cited in favor of this opinion. One undoubtedly would reduce many observations of this kind to their proper value if one would subject them to a thoughtful and impartial investigation." Thus wrote a thoughtful and learned professor of medicine. Death spared him the fate of facing Villemen's and Koch's works, which proved beyond the question of a doubt the contagiousness of tuberculosis.

Villemen was the man who proved in a military hospital in Paris that tuberculosis spread from one infected soldier to another. The tragedy of tuberculosis is that it is spread from those who are closest and dearest. Every worker in tuberculosis can cite the case of one lover infecting the other. There is perhaps no more common method of disseminating the infection, and here the old saying that love is blind is tragically true. Opie cites the work on marital tuberculosis carried out at the University of Pennsylvania, which shows that if one partner of a marriage has active tuberculosis, the other will show definite evidence of the disease in 50 per cent of the cases.

Five Meals Called Aid To Efficiency

Tests Show Energy Stays at Higher Level During Day.

Suggestions Are Given for Snacks Between Regular Repasts.

RECENT experiments conducted at one of the large Eastern universities point conclusively to the fact that "many of us would be more efficient if we would take five meals a day instead of three." To prove this point, numerous tests were made of factory workers, school children, stenographers and teachers. Their muscular efficiency stayed higher on a five-meal plan on a two or three meal schedule.

These findings should prove interesting to the mother whose children come home hungry after school. She should neither urge them to wait until dinner without eating or let them fill up on sweets.

For the mother or Christmas shopper a light lunch in the morning or in mid-afternoon will provide a pick-up. This nourishment will relieve the tired feeling, and while the old idea is that the lunch will ruin appetites, the truth is that it really distributes the intake into four meals instead of three, and does not mean a larger intake of food.

Cookies, Milk Good.

Molasses cookies and milk furnish an excellent afternoon snack for hungry youngsters. The cookies provide high energy value. A chocolate milk made from some of the ready-to-mix flavors, or a banana milk also would be good beverages.

Sandwiches spread with peanut butter, cottage cheese or jam will serve nicely for this repast. A glass of orange juice or tomato juice can be used for the accompaniment.

These cookies provide elements high in energy value and are a good item to have on hand at all times.

Molasses Cookies.

1½ cups of dairy molasses
1 tablespoon of powdered ginger
1 cup of butter
½ cup of brown sugar
1 teaspoon of black pepper
4½ cups of wheat flour
1½ teaspoons of soda
½ teaspoon of salt

Combine the first five ingredients in a sauce pan and bring to a boil. Sift the flour, and add the soda and salt. Sift together into a mixing bowl. Add the hot sirup gradually, stirring and mixing into a stiff dough. Toss on floured pastry cloth. Roll to ¼-inch thick. Cut as desired. Bake 12 to 15 minutes on a greased baking sheet in a moderately hot oven.

Orange honey bread is a new type bread for afternoon snacks sandwiches. The slices of bread can be spread with cream cheese and served as party refreshments should friends drop in for tea.

ORANGE HONEY BREAD.

2 tablespoons of fat
1 cup of honey
1 egg
1½ tablespoons of grated orange rind
2½ cups of flour
2½ teaspoons of baking powder
½ teaspoon of soda
½ teaspoon of salt
¾ cup of orange juice
2 tablespoons of orange marmalade

Cream the shortening and add the honey. Beat the egg until creamy Add the grated orange peel, and mix with the shortening. Sift the flour, baking power and salt. Add alternately with the orange juice and marmalade. Pour into a greased 3-inch loaf pan. Bake for 70 minutes in an oven set at 325 degrees.

Tell Fortunes at Parties

YOU'RE TIRED of that corner you get stuck in at parties? You can make it the most popular spot in the room if you know even one way to tell fortunes.

So start with card fortunes. They're grand fun and you quickly learn how by practicing on kid sister or on yourself.

Suppose you want to reveal the "Secret of the Seven Sisters." You pick a card to represent you. If you have brown hair, blue eyes, you're a Queen of Hearts.

Then make a wish and shuffle twice, each time removing from the deck the cards following the 7-spots. Shuffle again, removing each seventh card. The rest of the cards you lay face up in 7 rows of 5 cards each. Put the 3 or 4 left over in a separate row.

Suppose you find a 9 of hearts or your own queen in this row. Your wish comes true. If the cards are mostly black or if the 9 of spades is present—no luck.

If an 8 of clubs turns up close to your queen, you'll have a date soon with a new romance. If an ace of diamonds glitters, an engagement ring's coming your way. A 10 of diamonds promises a tidy little legacy.

YOUR FIGURE, MADAME!

By Ida Jean Kain.

THIS SEASON'S evening gowns have apparently been created on the principle that all women have perfect figures! Unless your three major measurements—bust, waist and hipline—are very nearly perfect, you won't be able to slip into one of these elegant creations.

We will just dismiss the major measurements and assume that you live up to the fashion designers' expectations. Since practically all the gowns fit with a glove-like fidelity, however, you are more than likely to want special exercise to deal with such usually important measurements as the thighline.

As a rule you forget about the thighline from one bathing suit season to the next, but not this year! Whether you decide on a "needle slim" satin gown or one in the spirit of 1900, with froufrou ruffles swishing about the hem, you will find the skirt hugs the knees and accents this measurement. In most figures the thighs are not beautifully molded. They either bulge or sink in, for the very simple reason that the thigh muscles get very little exercise. With daily specific exercise you can wear down the fat pads or build up the hollows to give the thighs a lovely line. Begin your thigh exercise with the following:

POSITION: Stand about 18 inches from a chair, the seat turned toward you.

MOVEMENT: Swing one leg, then the other, in a wide arc over the chair seat. The foot should describe a semi-circle in front of the body, moving from one side to the other and back. Perform ten times with one leg, and ten with the other. As you become more proficient at the exercise, extend the swing to the back of the body and try to keep the foot the same distance from the floor throughout the movement.

The second exercise is exhilarating and will give your circulation a jog:

POSITION: Stand with the feet as

Evening fashions allow for curves—but not for bulges, even on the thigh line.

wide apart as you can get them, with entire body stretching upward.

MOVEMENT: Leap into the air and bring the feet down in a criss-cross movement, with the right foot on the extreme left of the body and the left foot on the extreme right. Repeat the leap and return to original position. Continue the exercise with first one foot and then the other in front of the body as the legs are crossed. Begin with ten counts and gradually increase.

When you do these exercises you will understand why it is that the thigh muscles are so much in need of special attention. Plan to devote ten minutes a day to this type exercise.

Campfire Cooking.

When cooking over the open fire, two types of fires are needed. A hot fire is needed for preparing coffee, cooking vegetables, stews and roasting potatoes. Steaks and barbecues are prepared over the embers. Before cooking the steaks, salt well and oil the surface with olive oil or butter. The flavor is improved and the oil keeps the surface from charring.

Butter Rich Source Of Vitamins, Dairy Surveys Reveal

Butterfat, the most important of vitamin A, is receiving increasing attention in the diet as a result of a recent statement by Dr. James McLester, past president of the American Medical Association, that for buoyant health a person should have daily four times the amount of vitamin A necessary to cover absolute body needs.

Here are some of the newest findings on butter as reported by the National Dairy Council:

Butter in storage retains its vitamin A when it is stored at low temperature for as long as two years.

The acidity of cream at churning time does not affect the vitamin A content of the finished product. Sour cream butter therefore has the same vitamin A content as butter made of sweet cream.

Butter made from the cream of irradiated milk has lost none of its vitamin A value.

There is no loss of vitamin D in the churning process.

Fruit Juice Basting.

The sirup left over from spiced fruits make an excellent basting for ham, pork, and veal roasts. The sirup from the spiced peaches, apricots, crabapples, watermelon rind preserves, and sweet pickled pears are all adapted to this use. The sirup enhances the taste of the meat and the vinegar tenderizes the meat during cooking.

VITAMINS?

• If you eat apples daily you'll get some mighty fine food values. Vitamins in important quantities that protect health: A, B, C and G. Minerals for body-building: iron, calcium, magnesium and phosphorus. Gentle roughage accompanied by pectin that is a fine intestinal healing agent. And there's nothing better for developing strong, shiny teeth and healthy gums. Sounds almost like a doctor's words, doesn't it? But what a swell way to enjoy good health: EATING APPLES! Why, that's a pleasure! Remember—the finest apples in America come from the Appalachian area. In market now.

Mrs. Baker's Fruit Cake Wins Prize

Post Recipe Award Goes to Officers Wife, Former Singer.

'Perfect' Formula Evolved in Seven Years of Cooking Experiment.

By Jean Green.

MRS. DAVID H. BAKER, wife of Lieut. Baker, of Bolling Field, started seven years ago to make the perfect fruit cake. A former concert singer, she had added food to her hobbies after her marriage. She had studied and mastered the native dishes in Panama when her husband was stationed there. Having never seen a wholly satisfactory fruit cake—one that cut successfully, was moist, and perfectly seasoned—Mrs. Baker determined to create one. After much experimentation, she evolved the recipe that was the prize-winner in last week's Favorite Recipe Contest.

Yesterday in her home, Mrs. Baker displayed the fruit cakes baked for her Christmas entertaining. With the help of her cook, she made them two weeks ago. They were wrapped in cloth dampened with sherry, a procedure important in retention of moisture, and stored in air-tight tins, to retain their texture and flavor.

Here is Mrs. Baker's recipe:

Rich Fruit Cake.

Fruit.

1 package of currants
1 package of raisins
½ pound of candied lemon peel
½ pound of candied orange peel
6 ounces of citron
1 pound of candied pineapple
1 pound of candied cherries
1 pound of pitted dates
2 cups of pecans

Cake.

1 cup of shortening
1 cup of brown sugar (packed tight)
6 eggs
4 cups of cake flour
1 teaspoon of baking powder
1 tablespoon of cinnamon
1 teaspoon of allspice
1 teaspoon of nutmeg
½ teaspoon of cloves
½ teaspoon of salt
1 cup of sherry or any kind of fruit juice (if fruit juice is used, use 2 teaspoons of rum extract in it)

Here is how the fruit cake should be baked as explained by Mrs. Baker:

"Wash the raisins and currants thoroughly, then let them soak while preparing the other fruit. Take the scissors and cut the fruit into any size desired. I cut the fruit into rather large pieces, the cherries into fourths and the dates into fourths as I like to see the fruit in a fruit cake. Cut the nuts on top of the fruit. Take the currants and raisins out of the water and add to the fruit.

"Cream the shortening and brown sugar together. Add the eggs and beat until thoroughly mixed with the sugar and shortening. Mix and sift flour, spices and salt. Add alternately with the sherry to the first mixture. Now add your baking powder.

"Pour the cake mixture over the fruit and nuts, thoroughly mixing with your hands. It takes less time and you get better results when mixed in this way. Grease wax paper and put into the greased mold or any cake pan you choose to bake the cake in. Pour the cake mixture in and decorate top with candied fruits and nuts. Bake covered in oven 275 degrees for two or three hours, depending on the size of the cake.

This cake can be cut the day it is made or left to season, after being wrapped in cloths wet with sherry."

For those who prefer a simpler and less expensive fruit cake The Post this week has given a cash award of $2 to the best recipe for a budget fruit cake. This prize was won by Mrs. Jessie Sellers, New Market, Va. The feature of the cake is the use of colored gum candy. These are sliced and added in the cake to take the place of candied fruits. This cake can be baked the day before Christmas.

Inexpensive Fruit Cake.

2 cups of sugar
1 cup of butter
2 cups of stewed apples
5 cups of flour
1 teaspoon of cinnamon
1 teaspoon of nutmeg
1 teaspoon of cloves
2 teaspoons of soda dissolved in hot water
1 box of raisins
¾ teaspoon of salt
1 cup of walnuts
½ to ¾ pound of colored gum candy

Mix the ingredients in the order named. Cream the sugar and butter. Add the stewed apples. Sift the dry ingredients. Chop walnuts. Roll raisins and chopped walnuts in part of flour. Add flour and stir well. Add the chopped walnuts, raisins and sliced colored gum candy. Bake for 1½ hours. Have oven set at 325 degrees during the first 30 minutes and at 400 degrees during the balance of the time.

The third prize was awarded Mrs. Lillian Petty, 1920 S street northwest. Her recipe has the endorsement of her many friends. The proportions given are for 11 pounds of delicious cake.

Southern Fruit Cake.

1 pound of seedless raisins
2 pounds of seeded raisins
1 pound of crystallized pineapple
1 pound of crystallized cherries
1 pound of citron
Juice of one orange
½ pound of black walnuts
½ pound of pecans
½ pound of balanced almonds
12 eggs
1 teaspoon of baking powder
1 pound of butter
1 pound of sugar
1 pound of sifted flour
1 cup of wine
1 cup of whiskey
Spices to suit taste

Cream the butter and sugar together well. Add ½ pound of the flour and baking powder and beat each egg into the mixture thoroughly. After cutting the raisins, nuts, and fruits up finely, mix other half pound of flour into fruits and nuts. Add this mixture to the creamed butter, eggs, and flour. Add the juice of one orange, wine, whiskey, and spices. The ingredients must be well mixed.

Line pans with well-buttered brown paper. The cooking requires about 5 hours. Cook very slowly.

The fourth award is given Mrs. T. J. Crooke, Mount Crawford, Va., for her mother's white fruit cake. It is an unusually good flavored cake that has been used for many years by Mrs. Crooke.

Frances Headley White Fruit Cake.

½ pound of pecan meats
¼ pound of blanched almonds
½ pound of white cherries
½ pound of pineapple chopped fine
¼ pound of orange peel
¼ pound of lemon peel
2 pounds of white raisins
¾ pound of shredded cocoanut
1 pound of powdered sugar
1 pound of flour
¾ pound of butter
6 eggs
1 small glass of wine
1 teaspoon of baking powder
1 teaspoons of nutmeg
1 teaspoon of lemon flavoring
1 teaspoon of vanilla flavoring

Mix all fruits, spices and wine and let stand over night. Next morning prepare the batter by mixing well-beaten eggs, well-sifted flour, butter, sugar and baking powder. Add fruits, flavoring and a dash of salt. Bake for three or four hours.

The recipe winning the fifth award was sent in by Eugenia Taylor Reid, 117 Patton avenue northwest, Roanoke, Va. It is frankly expensive to prepare, but well flavored.

Fruit Cake.

1 cup of butter
1 cup of granulated sugar
5 large eggs
½ pound of flour
½ pound of citron
¼ pound of candied pineapple
¼ pound of candied cherries
¼ pound of orange and lemon peel
½ package of dates
¼ package of figs
1 box of white seedless raisins
½ box of seeded dark raisins
½ pound of crystallized ginger
¼ pound of nuts (1 teaspoon of almond extract may be substituted for the nuts)
½ cup of brandy (wine or orange juice may be substituted)
1 teaspoon of vanilla
1 teaspoon of nutmeg
1 teaspoon of mace
1 teaspoon of baking powder

Cream the butter. Add the sugar gradually and beat until light and fluffy. Add the egg yolks well beaten. Add the flour, sifted before measuring. Add liquid, flavoring and spices and baking powder. Add the egg whites beaten stiff. Add fruit cut into small pieces. Have them floured with one cup of flour before adding. Mix thoroughly. Put the mixture into a well greased cake mold, slightly floured. Set in a pan of water. Place in oven. Have oven set at 350 degrees. Lower to 250 after 30 minutes. Bake three hours. Remove from water during last hour of baking.

Post Recipe Prize Winner and Her Holiday Fruit Cake

Post Offers Cash Prizes for Best Christmas Menus

Are you planning a home dinner for Christmas? Are the children coming home from college? Are you a live-aloner who plans to invite the current boy friend in for a real Christmas dinner? If you are, then you probably have your menu planned for the meal, and have chosen your table decorations. Perhaps you are having turkey, or a red and green dinner, or a goose.

We are interested in hearing your ideas. For the five Christmas dinners published, The Post is awarding cash prizes. The first is $3, the second $2 and there are three prizes of $1 each.

Write out the menu you plan to serve. If you have an unusual dish included on the menu, give the recipe for preparing it. Mail your Christmas dinner to Miss Jean Green, Post Food Editor, before December 11.

White and Brown Eggs.

Housewives almost invariably show a preference for white eggs and pay from two to five cents a dozen more for white than for brown eggs. In Boston, the situation is neatly reversed. But chemical tests have disclosed no difference between white and brown eggs either as to flavor or other characteristics. The color of the yolk is not related to the color of the shell.

Oyster stew should be garnished with a very liberal sprinkling of paprika and a pat of butter.

Child Students Warn Parents Against 'Softies'

Association Cites Dangers of Oversheltering Young People Today.

A WARNING to parents to avoid rearing their children as "softies" is given by the Child Study Association of America in the current issues of its monthly publication, "Child Study."

Emphasizing that the "most important, most all-pervading need of the young child is a feeling of security," child psychologists point out that the only way the child can be given that security is to make him self-reliant.

Dr. Susan Isaacs, British psychologist, urges that children learn to take care of themselves, to find confidence in their own skill and knowledge and good sense. Many a child who is carefully safeguarded, she says, often feels very insecure because he is so much taken care of. Children who are "oversheltered," she points out, often become restless and unhappy and neurotic because they despair of ever learning to do things for themselves.

Study Director Agrees.

Mrs. Sidonie Matsner Gruenberg, director of the Child Study Association, believes that too much coddling of young people is responsible for much of the confusion and uncertainty which they are now experiencing. She especially urges that boys and girls learn to do useful work.

"It is characteristic of our times," she says, "that we have eagerly used our expanding resources and our new understandings to shield our children from all risks of this very risky business of living, and that in doing so we have also excluded them from learning that business.

"In parts of Colorado I have seen the men and women whose parents had pioneered across the trackless prairies and mountains holding sons and daughters down to a completely conventionalized and monotonous—but perfectly safe—life that imitates as closely as possible the routine of the supposedly privileged classes in old communities. Men who had in their time managed buffaloes and landslides doubted anxiously whether their children and grandchildren could manage bicycles, or could be trusted near water before learning to swim.

"It is small wonder that so many of the young people have to find their excitement in rah-rah rallies. From being the sheltered generation they become the soft generation; and they themselves derive their own greatest insecurity and dissatisfaction from being soft."

To Shape Croquettes.

Croquettes often burst open because they are too large, too thin, or poorly shaped. Shape them either as cones or as cylinders. This is simple if the mixture is chilled first. Then dip into beaten egg and roll in crumbs or cracker meal. Be sure that the temperature of the fat is correct. A temperature between 365 and 382 degrees is best. Only the fats that do not burn readily are suitable for deep fat frying.

PLEASANT HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

WE REJOICE in our attic and cellar because we have a very bad hoarding instinct. It really pains us to throw anything away, even an old newspaper, for fear it will come in handy some day. And once in a while it does.

But on general principles we disapprove of hoarding. Especially when there's no attic or cellar available to take the gaff . . . even when there is, think of how much better use the space could be put to. Well, whatever a lady does with her hoardings is her own business, so long as she keeps it out of the living quarters of the house.

But the commonest fault of most rooms we see here and there is not a lack but a surplus of things. And the first gesture that a good decorator usually makes is to eliminate rather than add to the furnishings of a room. That's something to think about in planning changes. It means generally a program of replacing instead of acquiring at random.

So, before you covet the next pretty thing you see, apply this test to the room on your mind: Move everything out that isn't actually used. Be very ruthless about it, even including all pictures and purely decorative ornaments. Now study the effect and do a bit of rearranging in order to get the best usefulness as well as the most charm out of the necessary elements. This means that sofa and easy chairs be in conversational reach of each other and so they don't block natural pathways through the room; that side chairs be adjacent to the furniture they'll be used with such as tables or desk; that occasional tables be adjacent to easy chairs for lamps, books and smoking things; that chests have sufficient wall space so that they don't seem crowded.

Then you can return only the pictures, ornaments and accessories that really add distinction to the room. You'll find that will probably be considerably fewer than you had before. Next decide which of the necessary things left in the room that you just plain don't like and make a five years' plan for replacing them. And when you see something you think you can't live without, don't buy it till you decide whether it can logically displace another possession.

Eggs, Veal, Lamb Show Price Drop

you will find eggs are very reasonably priced for this time of year. Certain meat prices are lower than they have been in the last two or three weeks. The forequarter of veal, the legs and chuck of lamb and smoked pork are items that offer excellent values.

At vegetable counters, you will find Brussels sprouts, carrots, cauliflower, rutabagas are priced at tempting prices. New beets and cabbage are coming in from the South. Green and wax beans are coming in from Florida. Large Italian chestnuts can be had to dress up the dinner menu.

Citrous fruits are now approaching the heighth of their season. Oranges, especially the small oranges for juice are cheap. The navel oranges from California and tangerines from Florida are at most markets. Apples are an excellent buy.

Calorie Count Is Held Answer To Dining Out

Dietician's Book Tells How to Avoid Attention If You Are Reducing.

IF YOU are attracting attention with your diet when you are invited out for dinner, the chances are you are not familiar with your calorie counting, contends Katherine Mitchell, administrative dietician of the Los Angeles County General Hospital, in her new book, "The Deuce of Reducing."

Without attracting attention or refusing food, Miss Mitchell has worked out a plan by which any guest bent on reducing can successfully get through the meal. Her secret is to concentrate on the low calorie foods.

Here are some of her rules:

Plan your breakfast and lunch so that at least 530 calories will be left to spread through the banquet. With this number you should be able to have a grand time.

Hors d'Oeuvres Hold Calories.

If your first course is a cocktail, you will need also hors d'oeuvres, which will be about 75 calories each. The second course of a clear consomme can be eaten with a clear conscience. Radishes and celery can be consumed with real abandon.

Pass the wafers by, or take one if you must, but don't eat it and don't be intrigued into eating the butter, no matter how it is served. Keep eating celery to keep up the appearance of eating, or enter into a sprightly conversation.

The meat course will probably cost only a good 200 calories and the vegetable another 100. Make only a polite gesture at the potato. Save the potato a conspicuous isolation by a companionable bit of the meat and vegetable.

Salad Course Is Safe.

The salad course should be safe. If the salad is cool and crip, with just a touch of dressing to add to its piquancy, then eat heartily. This type of salad will add up to 100 calories. If you suspect whipped cream in in the mayonnaise, look and act as if you were eating but don't do it.

If your hostess serves fruit for dessert, or cheese, you can do pretty well with your few remaining calories. If she goes in for the plum pudding variety of dessert, you can just make a gesture and devote yourself to coffee. Better—if you think it's going to be offered—save your calories for the cordial.

As a general rule, Miss Mitchell recommends sticking to the protein foods, fruits and vegetables, when invited out for dinner. She warns against concoctions, as the souffles and "a la kings," as they are apt to be laden with cream and butter.

When tall candles don't fit their holders, dip the bases into hot water and quickly press them into holders. Hold them there firmly until they become embedded in the holder.

Capital Dishes

SEVERAL unusual dishes were featured at the annual round table Christmas party of the Home Economics Women in Business Friday night at Brookings Institute. Among them was a gorgeous fruit juice cocktail which appeared in red and white layers of juice with a sprig of mint for garnish.

The menu was planned by Edith Birks, dietitian at the institute. The menu follows:

Dinner.

Red and white layered fruit juice cocktail
Mint garnish
Toasted French bread sprinkled with poppyseeds
Hot sliced turkey shortcake with rich gravy
Parsley Sliced ripe olives Radish rose
Casserole of eggplant crumb top
Lettuce salad with herb dressing
Waffle bread with cinnamon and brown sugar
Choice of desserts
Gingerbread balls with peppermint frosting
Cranberry and banana pie
Chocolate pie with whipped cream

The menu, which was outstanding in every way, carried out a color scheme of red and green. Here are a few of the dishes as analyzed by The Post Food Editor.

The cocktail formed by pouring sweet cherry juice over grapefruit juice, was served with French bread cut into paper thin slices and generously buttered before being toasted.

The hot sliced turkey shortcake was made by inserting slices of boiled turkey between layers of rich yellow cornbread. The turkey was boiled with onion, parsley, and vegetables. The gravy used over the shortcake was made by "frying out" scraps of salt pork, adding browned flour, turkey drippings, and seasonings. It was served on the plate with slices of giant ripe olives for garnish. Its flavor contrasted with the casserole of eggplant made with mashed tender eggplant combined with cream, chives and parsley.

Fruit Breads.

If bread is the staff of life, then fancy bread is the gold knob on the end of it. Dates, raisins, fresh fruit and canned fruit can all be used in preparing special feast day fruit breads from yeast sponge. Pineapple muffins, banana bread, orange bread, date graham rolls, and Dutch apple kuchen are some of them. They can be used the day after in the lunch box.

New Ways of Serving Vegetables Described

Large Spanish onions stuffed with baked beans are unusual. Serve them on a mound of fluffy mashed potatoes for an attractive main dish on meatless days. The inspiration for this dish comes from New England.

Seasoning and Stuffing Are Best Method of Making Familiar Dishes Seem Different; Onion, Beets Lend Selves to Treatment.

By Nancy Ellis.

AT A RECENT party one matron said, "I like to plan menus, but when it comes to new vegetable dishes, I am a total blank. I seem to always have then either buttered or creamed. Can't you suggest something new?"

Interesting ways of serving vegetables? There are dozens of them. Some of the most drastic are to add a new seasoning, or to stuff them. Whole vegetables par-boiled and stuffed with a contrasting food offer a royal dish. Not only potatoes, but onions, rutabagas, beets, tomatoes, green peppers, cabbage and egg plant can be stuffed successfully. If well done, there is no more interesting addition for the vegetable plate.

Spanish or Bermuda onions now on the market offer a perfect base for a stuffed vegetable dish. Their large size, mild flavor, and cheap cost make them a wise choice. A stuffing of baked beans is used in the recipe given today but bread crumbs, rice, or meat combinations may be used.

This recipe comes from New England. Canned beans baked with molasses and pork are used for them.

Spanish Onions Stuffed With Baked Beans.

1 cup of baked beans
¼ cup of bread crumbs
2 tablespoons of butter
½ teaspon of Worcestershire sauce

Select firm onions of uniform size. Scoop out as much of the center as possible. Mix the baked beans with the Worcestershire sauce. Fill the onions with the mixture. Melt the butter and blend with the bread crumbs. Sprinkle over the top of the beans. Place in a baking dish. Pour over them a little boiling water. Bake until tender at 400 degrees F. Garnish with parsley before serving.

The second method of providing interesting vegetable dishes is to combine them to obtain a new flavor. Often two rather unpopular vegetables gain a new personality when combined. This idea of combining vegetables is not a new idea but it can be used in a more effective fashion. Instead of limiting the combinations to carrots and peas, or celery and tomatoes try adding large chestnuts to Brussel sprouts. Or "Frenching" the green beans and serving them with chopped mushrooms. These are epicurean combinations.

Brussel Sprouts With Large Chestnuts.

1 pound of large chestnuts
1/3 cup of butter
Salt
Pepper

Cook the sprouts in boiling water until tender. Put the chestnuts on to cook in cold water. Boil for five minutes. Remove the skins.

Grease a casserole. Put in a layer of sprouts, a layer of chestnuts. Add alternately until all are used. Sprinkle with salt and pepper. Dot with butter. Add just enough water to moisten. Bake for 30 minutes in an oven set at 400 degrees F.

The green beans cooked with the mushrooms is a delicately flavored dish that belongs on a very sophisticated menu. The dish is simple to prepare and is not too expensive. The green beans on the market are being shipped in from Florida but are of good quality. There is little waste in their preparation.

Green Beans With Chopped Mushrooms.

4 tablespoons of butter
1 onion
Salt
Pepper

Wash and cut any blemishes from the green beans. Run through one of the new bean shredders or cut into slivers lengthwise with a paring knife. Cook in boiling water for 15 minutes. Drain. Wash the fresh mushrooms. Slice and brown in the butter. Add the chopped onion. Combine with the cooked beans. Season with salt and pepper. This amount serves six persons.

Wouldn't colorful challis or printed cotton be an ideal fabric? Detailed Sewing Guide accompanies this pattern.

By Alan Gould.
Associated Press Sports Editor.

New York, Dec. 3.—The All-America swing back to the sector that cradled this foundation for annual football argument, well under way last season, reached a peak during the spectacular campaign of 1937.

To the ancient and battle-scarred East today goes the distinction of placing no fewer than five players on the big all-star eleven, selected by The Associated Press on the basis of a Nation-wide survey of expert opinion.

On the main gridiron fronts only the old South, including the rugged Southwest area, rivaled the East for individual honors in a season marked otherwise by (1) California's swift return to the West Coast heights, (2) a sharp dip in the fortunes of Big Ten teams, including even Minnesota, erstwhile national leader, and (3) a competitive pace so swift that only a handful of major teams survived pitfalls.

The East, with four teams in the Nation's "first ten" and interstectional prestige such as it hasn't known in fully a dozen years, dominated the All-America debate for the second straight year and by a wider margin.

On the squad of all-stars as a whole, comprising 33 players, there are an even dozen representatives of the "Old Guard's" domain. Pittsburgh's Rose Bowl champions placed two on the first team, Marshall (Biggie) Goldberg at halfback and Tony Matisi, 224-pound tackle. Yale, Cornell and Fordham each placed one player on the big eleven.

This is by far the East's best showing since 1925, the year The Associated Press began its annual All-America selections, following the death of the idea's founder, Walter Camp. It contrasts with such "de-emphasis" years as 1929 and 1930, when the East squeezed only a single entry into the All-America line-up.

Rockies Produce One.

This year the South and Southwest combined, taking in the territory from North Carolina to Texas, places 12 players on the All-America squad. First team awards go to the stars of Alabama, Vanderbilt and Texas A. & M. Notre Dame, with Charles Alexander Sweeney at one end, captures one of the prize spots for the first time since 1932. All told, however, the Midwest lands only five berths on the complete roster, contrasting with this area's monopoly of a few years ago. Four places go to the Far West, including first-team selections from California and Colorado.

Noteworthy, because he represents a sector rarely enjoying the national all-star spotlight, is the fact that the first team includes Byron Raymond (Whizzer) White, ace halfback of Colorado University. White, a Phi Beta Kappa student whose exploits have dazzled the wide open spaces for three seasons, picks up the All-America roll where his illustrious predecessor, Earl Harry (Dutch) Clark, left off at Colorado College in 1928.

White and Goldberg, the climax runner and sparkplug of the powerful Pittsburgh array, share the All-America backfield posts with Yale's renowned Clinton Edward Frank and California's Samuel Blake Chapman, the quadruple-threat man of the Pacific Coast championship team.

This quartet, on all major counts, stood out so conspicuously from start to finish that little room was left for argument, notwithstanding there was no lack of startling exploits by the lads who could kick, run, pass, block or back up the line. Specialists abounded in every section.

Frank Repeats.

Frank, picked for the second straight year to call signals for the All-America, climaxed a gridiron career that has had few, if any, superiors in the annals of Yale. This rugged 190-pounder, best known for his offensive talents, as a line-cracker, broken-field runner and forward-passer, was equally brilliant on defense. He scored Yale's last eight touchdowns of 1937, and paced the Blue through an unbeaten season until the Harvard game. Yet he scaled perhaps his greatest heights in that one defeat.

Pittsburgh has a wealth of fine backs but only one Goldberg. The big Jewish boy for two years has paced the most ferocious offense in the United States. Coaches say he is the fastest man, on his second step, that they have observed in years. But "Biggie" is not only a hard-driving, deceptive runner, equally dangerous off the tackles or around the ends. He is a good blocker, hard-hitting on the defensive, and plays the safety spot.

Colorado's White and California's Chapman give the All-America backfield its essential balance. White's offensive record reads like fiction. His passing percentage was slightly less effective than Frank's but well above the average, in addition to which he punted for the fine average of close to 44 yards from scrimmage. He specialized in long runs from either the safety position or scrimmage. In his two big conference tests the Whizzer tallied all 17 points for his team against Utah and, in the climax rout of Denver on Thanksgiving Day, tallied three touchdowns personally, booted four extra points, and forward passed for two other scores. He topped the Nation's scorers with a total of 122 points in eight games.

Chapman, although frequently yielding the headlines to his flashier teammate, Vic Bottari, generally was conceded to be the spark-plug and heavy-duty man for the Golden Bears. He shared blocking honors with Johnny Meek, 225-pound quarterback, did most of the kicking and passing, and a large chunk of the tackling. On the defense Chapman, like Frank, roamed all over the field. Notably against Washington, the only team to tie California, Chapman's work was a life-saver.

The Southwest had no Sammy Baugh on the pass-firing line this season but it is doubtful if that area ever produced a greater all-

Mickey Not Yet Well, Trade Indicates.

By Shirley Povich.

New York, Dec. 3.—The only seeming explanation for that six-man deal between the Tigers and the White Sox at Milwaukee the other day is that cracked skull Manager Mickey Cochrane received at Yankee Stadium last summer. Until he upped and traded Gerald Walker, Marvin Owen and a young catcher to the White Sox, it was thought that Cochrane was recovering nicely from last summer's sock on the head.

POVICH.

His old pal of Philadelphia days, Manager Jimmy Dykes, of the White Sox, has been making a mild chump of Cochrane ever since they both graduated to managerial berths. The six-player deal of the other day is the latest exhibition of Cochrane being worsted by Dykes in a player trade.

You remember that back in the winter of 1935-36, at Chicago, Dykes wheedled $75,000 out of the Tigers in exchange for Outfielder Al Simmons. Cochrane, at the time, thought he had something there. Fifteen months later he was glad to unload Simmons to the Washington club at the waiver price of $7,500. I guess Dykes didn't chuckle about that.

How Deal Shapes Up.

And now comes this six-player thing. Cochrane gave Dykes one of the league's absolute best outfielders in Walker, one of its finest third basemen in Owen and a young catcher who shows promise. In exchange, Dykes gave Cochrane a pitcher named Kennedy, an outfielder named Dixie Walker and a third baseman named Piet.

Cochrane is laying great store by the acquisition of Kennedy, but opinion around the league is, bluntly, that Kennedy isn't so hot despite the 21 games he won in 1936 and the no-hitter he pitched that season. He'll give the Tigers plenty

Coaches Vote Against Any Rule Change

A.P. Poll Reveals College Mentors Frown on 'Tinkering.'

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 3.—Despite agitation for three specific rules changes designed to help the offense in football, a Nation-wide poll of college coaches by the associated Press today reveals a strong general desire to "leave well enough alone."

This may help to simplify the task of the National Collegiate A. A. rules committee, which goes into its annual huddle on New Year's Day at Edgewater Park, Miss. This session, which is being held two months earlier than usual, will follow the annual N. C. A. A. convention in New Orleans.

Subject to various reservations, such as those proposed by Notre Dame's Elmer Layden and Nebraska's Biff Jones, a "no tinkering" policy with regard to the rules is advocated by a majority of head coaches. The list favoring conservative approach to any consideration of rules changes includes Jock Sutherland of Pittsburgh, Dick Harlow of Harvard, Bill Kern of Carnegie, Hank Hardwick of Navy, Ray Morrison of Vanderbilt, Wallace Wade of Duke, Stub Allison of California and Harry Kipke of Michigan.

Warner Suggests Changes.

The veteran Glenn (Pop) Warner, of Temple, heads the coaching wing which feels something drastic should be done to keep the defense, with its five-man line as a prime example, from getting the upper hand on the gridiron.

The three changes most discussed, as likely to aid the offense, comprise (1) return of the goal posts to the goal line; (2) legalizing forward passing from any spot behind the scrimmage line, and (3) forcing the defense to keep a definite number of players on the scrimmage line, preferably six.

Frank Thomas, coach of Alabama's Rose Bowl-bound team, is particularly strong in support of limiting defense formations.

"It is impossible to teach college boys blocking assignments for all the various defense set-ups now being played, with the limited time we have for practice," says Thomas.

Little Agrees With Warner.

Columbia's Lou Little, who has headed the coaches' own rules committe for several years, agrees with Thomas and Warner on a proposal to compel the defense to keep a definite number of men on the line of scrimmage. The only alternative, in Little's opinion, is to do away

Capt. Wood Is Named Army Football Coach

Ex-West Point Athlete Has Had Considerable Experience.

By the Associated Press.

West Point, N. Y., Dec. 3.—Capt. William H. (Bill) Wood, former Army backfield ace and a 12-letter athlete during his cadet career, today was named head coach of West Point football, succeeding Capt. Garrison H. (Gar) Davidson.

Army policy and precedents ordinarily limit head coaching assignments at the Military Academy to a four-year maximum, but Davidson remained an extra year by special order.

Wood, a Cavalry officer with a background including considerable coaching experience at West Point, will take over direction of Army's gridiron destinies next summer. Except for a three-year tour of duty in 1929-31 and his assignment during the last year to the General Staff School at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., Wood was an assistant coach at West Point from the year of his graduation, 1925.

The new head coach entered the Academy in 1921 after attending Johns Hopkins University for two years. He made the football varsity his first year, starring as a kicker and defensive fullback through four seasons. His best-known team mates included George Smythe, broken-field star, and Ed Garbisch, All-America center.

Wood also played basketball and baseball, winning 12 varsity letters, the maximum possible during the days when plebes were eligible for varsity competition. Subsequently he was backfield coach of the plebes for one year and an assistant varsity backfield coach for eight seasons.

Teams coached during the last five years by Davidson won 35 games, lost 11 and tied 1. They made it three out of five from the Navy with a 6-0 verdict last Saturday. The esteem in which Davidson was held by his pupils was emphasized when they presented him the ball used in the service match. Ordinarily this is the captain's trophy.

'Bama Grid Squad Resumes Practice For Bowl Battle

Tuscaloosa, Ala., Dec. 3 (AP).—Alabama's Rose Bowl-bound Crimson Tide unpacked uniforms and returned to the practice field today to begin preparations for the New Year's Day game with California at Pasadena.

Calisthenics and "loosening up" exercises comprised the Tidemen's first post-season drill. Regular practice will not begin until Monday.

Three regulars, Captain Leroy Monsky and Lew Bostick, guards, and Charley Holm, fullback, who came out of the Vanderbilt game with injuries, were in uniform along with the rest of the squad today.

Coach Frank Thomas said he expected them to be in good shape by January 1.

Wins Gonzaga Title.

Bears, L. S. U. Favored; New Year Gates May Be $750,000

New York, Dec. 3 (AP).—Broadway bookmakers have made California an 8-to-5 choice over Alabama in the Rose Bowl game; Louisiana State 7 to 5 to turn the tables on Santa Clara when they meet again in the Sugar Bowl . . . Figure filberts estimate aggregate gate receipts of New Year's grid games, from Miami to Pasadena, will approach $750,000 . . . But have you ever heard of a college paying an excess profits tax?

Anyway, Fordham's rueful Rams know how Colgate's Red Raiders felt in 1932 . . . That was the year the Colgates were unbeaten, untied, unscored-on—and uninvited . . . Pittsburgh got the 1933 Rose Bowl match and a 35-0 shellacking from Southern California . . . Panthers were unbeaten during regular season but tied twice, by Nebraska and Ohio State.

Nomination for passingest game in big college leagues this year: Arkansas-Tulsa . . . combined, they tossed 72 passes, completed 33 for an aggregate gain of 483 yards . . . Cornell's rushing attack against Pennsylvania, generating 339 yards or an average of nearly 7 yards per try, represented one of season's biggest ground-gaining achievements.

Against 10 major opponents, Texas Christian's Davey O'Brien, 153-pound quarterback, played 586 out of a possible 600 minutes. . . He did the passing, punting, most of the running and figured in fully half the Frogs' plays . . . J. D. Ashley, of the Sioux Falls (S. D.) Argus-leader reports (A) that Billy Ryan, Uuniversity of South Dakota quarter-back, in three years made every touchdown of the season's big game against South Dakota State and (B) that Bobby Putnam, track star and backfield ace of Yankton College, returned kickoffs for 101 and 98 yards in one game, against Sioux Falls.

Leon Case, Michigan's secretary of state, gave up his own auto license number—7—so that it could be used on the car given to Earl (Dutch) Clark by admirers of the Detroit Lions' professional football star. . . Clark wore No. 7 throughout his grid career, at high school in Pueblo, at Colorado College, and in the pro ranks.

Bernie Bierman, who says he had trouble keeping the Minnesotas "keyed up" this year, isn't likely to have similar trouble during the 1938 season. . . . The Gophers open against Washington, then tackle Nebraska, Purdue, Michigan, take a week off and close on successive Saturdays against Northwestern, Iowa, Notre Dame and Wisconsin.

Alabama teams, during seven years under head coach Frank Thomas, show 57 victories, 6 defeats and 4 ties. . . That's as Good as any big league school's record in the country. . . St. Ambrose College of Davenport, Iowa, unbeaten for two years, shows 47 wins, 9 losses and 2 ties in seven seasons under the Tutelage of W. J. (Dukes) Duford, former Marquette fullback.

Cloudy Weather Easily Captures Winchester Purse at Charles Town

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

Charles Town, W. Va., Dec. 3.—On as clear a day as has ever been seen here in the mountains, Cloudy Weather, a gelded son of Mud, made a show of his field in winning the Winchester Purse, today's feature event. Just galloping at the finish of the "about" 6 furlongs race, Cloudy Weather finished with speed in reserve and eight lengths ahead of a driving Icy Wind. To add further prestige to B. F. Christmas, the owner of the winner, Idle Miss, an entry with Cloudy Weather, was third in the field of eight.

Cloudy Weather, a winner here yesterday, proved the first horse of the meeting to take down two purses. Those who backed the Christmas entry in the mutuel department received $7.20 for each $2 investment.

The usual weekday crowd of 5,000 saw the race and watched Cloudy Weather step the Charles Town course in 1:17 over a track that was only a shade from being fast.

Cloudy Weather forged to the front in the opening furlong and, from that point to the finish, the winner was never in doubt. Jockey Freddy Faust, of Washington, guided Cloudy Weather.

The program opened with a smashing victory by Razzle Dazzle in a field of maidens. The juvenile son of Kai-Sang came from behind the leaders and drew out in the final eighth to bring his backers an $11 mutuel.

A pay-off of $24.40 resulted from the daily double. Pineapple started the ball rolling by doing the "big apple" to her opponents. She took the lead at the break and romped home seven lengths in front of her nearest rival. Lillith put the finishing touches on the "double" in the third race, stepping to the wire Brooke, despite the fact that the five lengths in front of Frank latter beat the gate.

Showabal, a gelding which showed early speed in Maryland, made a runaway out of the fourth event. Under Jockey L. Pikor's urging, Showabal led all the way to take the measure of the highly regarded Sylvia G. Showabal paid $16.40.

Jockey Manny Berg rode Al's Pride in front virtually all the way to win the sixth race, the McInerney Purse. The High Cloud gelding have five lengths the best of Free which held Chatterdoo safe in the which held Chatterdoo safe in the final drive. The winner paid a $14.20 mutuel.

Last Scamp came through on the rail and wore down her rivals to pay $19.40 in the day's finale.

Seabiscuit, Amor Brujo May Meet

San Francsico, Dec. 3 (AP).—Seabiscuit, Charles S. Howard's champion American money winner, and Amor Brujo, South American mystery horse, may meet for the first time in the $10,000-added San Francisco Handicap at Tanforan December 18.

Howard said today he is anxious to see how Seabiscuit will run against Amor Brujo before entering the $100,000 Santa Anita Handicap.

A. E. Silver, trainer of the South American horse, said Amor Brujo would be entered in the San Francisco handicap and the $2,500-added half-moon mile handicap a week from Saturday.

around collection of backs. Pound for pound, "Little Davey" O'Brien, Baugh's successor in the key spot for Texas Christian, was probably the finest of the lot.

Ducky Pond, Yale's head coach, rates Holland's "second charge" as the most effective he has seen in a decade. The dusky giant plays right end on the offense and left end on defense. He not only has the power and footwork to aid him in breaking through or spilling interference but he is the team's No. 1 blocker, a good pass-catcher, and a ball-carrier on end-around plays. Carl Snavely, Cornell coach who shifted Holland from blocking back to end at the start of Brud's varsity career, rates him one of the smartest players he ever coached.

Injuries Tackle Daddio.

But for injuries that kept him idle much of the season, Pittsburgh's Bill Daddio likely would have crashed any all-star line-up. He was a sophomore sensation last year and rated the best end Pittsburg has seen. His teammate, Frank Souchak, won recognition for a fine all-around season, during which he took over the place-kicking assignment.

Even with so strong a case in hand for the top choices, among the ends, it is difficult to find much basis for preference over such talented performers as Pete Smith, a play-wrecker who featured Oklahoma's fine campaign and was rated the standout player of the Big Six; Jim Benton, of Arkansas, one of the greatest pass-catchers in Southwest conference history; Bill Jordan, of Georgia Tech, and Andy Gershak, of North Carolina, the South's best; John Dysocki, spectacular Villanova opportunist; and Ferdinand Dreher, powerful Denver wingman.

So keen was the competition among this year's end men that Handy Andy Bershak, North Carolina co-captain, dropped back a notch after placing on last year's second team. Yet Barshak had an even greater season than in 1936, playing a major role against every opponent but Fordham, and he would have rated higher honors but for the development of an extraordinary crop of rivals, including Bill Jordan, Georgia Tech's sensation.

Playing alongside his pal and star tackle, John Mellus, Wysocki formed a combination that wrecked many an opposing offense before it had a chance to get under way. In two games Wysocki scored 31 points, all Villanova tallied.

Hinkle at Center.

The choice for center, Carl Columbus Hinkle, jr., of Vanderbilt, likewise ran the gauntlet of closest scrutiny before getting the nod over such extraordinary performers as Ki Aldrich, Texas Christian junior; Alex Wojciechowicz, Fordham's mopper-upper; Big Bob Herwig, of California; Phil Dougherty, the key man in Santa Clara's successful campaign; and the two rivals for Big Six acclaim Charley Brock, of Nebraska, and Mickey Parks, of Oklahoma.

"Wojie" may have jarred more molars during the course of the season with the finality of his tackling but he covered no more ground, displayed no more ruggedness nor play-detecting inspiration than either Hinkle or Aldrich. It was the consensus of critics, in fact, that when they met on the same field Aldrich outplayed the Fordham veteran.

Hinkle's ranginess and durability, sustained for three seasons, gave him the edge on final analysis.

The Rest Is Simple.

Filling out the All-America line is relatively easy, at least insofar as putting the finger on the season's outstanding guards is concerned. Joe Routt, Texas A. & M. iron man, came with a rush down the stretch to keep the spot he was awarded on last year's eleven. Rated the standout lineman of the Southwest, Routt was the defensive backbone of the Aggies, tremendously agile and a fine blocker. His closest conference rival was his own teammate, Virgil Jones, but his all-star companion is another team leader, Leroy Monsky, of Alabama, who didn't have a bad day all season.

On the West Coast California had one of the season's best pairs of guards in Vard Stockton and Claude Evans. Pittsburgh's Al Lezouski, a sophomore, made up for the loss of Capt. Bill Glassford. Ralph Sivell, of Auburn, rated high in the South. Big Ten circles preferred Francis Tweddell, of Minnesota.

Fordham and Pitt.

For the tackles, it's impossible to go wrong by picking from the two stoutest lines in the East, if not the entire country, such stalwarts as chunky, granite-like Ed Franco, of Fordham and rangy, powerful Tony Matisi, of Pittsburgh. They have participated in three straight scoreless deadlocks while working on opposite sides of the line of combat. A penalty against Matisi for holding cost Pitt its best chance to break the spell this year, but Panther adherents still insist it was a legal "rolling block" and that the pictures fail to tell the whole story.

Notwithstanding that episode, Matisi's performance stamped him as the best offensive tackle in college football, well qualified to take the place of his 1936 All-American teammate, Averell Daniell. Tony is the powerhouse of the Pitt line, a ferocious blocker downfield, and a play-wrecker who carries authority with every charge.

Franco, no less spectacular as "Wojie" and rated by some New York critics as not the offensive equal of Al Babartsky at the other tackle spot, has been a tower on the defense for three seasons.

of grief with those bases on balls he issues with a frequency that is fraught with gray hairs for Cochrane.

Dixie Walker never has justified his early promise of becoming a great outfielder. The Yankees weren't averse to letting him go at the waiver price a couple of seasons ago, and since then Walker suffered a broken collarbone that has handicapped his throwing. And when Detroit fans get a load of Dixie Walker in Gerald Walker's accustomed spot in the outfield and in the batting order, I, for one, would not want to be Mickey Cochrane.

Piet No World-Beater.

Oh, yes, the Tigers now have Tony Piet, too. I don't know much about Piet except that he couldn't make good with the Pittsburgh Pirates and was considered a joke third baseman with the White Sox. Piet is a second baseman by trade, but with Charley Gehringer still in extreme good health the Tigers have about as much need for another second baseman as they have for smallpox.

And Dykes, all he got out of the deal was an outfielder who batted .351 last season and is a winning ball player, a third baseman who will give the White Sox the best defensive protection in the league, and a fairish-looking rookie catcher. He's slipping—he's slipping it to Cochrane.

It seems that the Red Sox and the Browns also made news. Manager Joe Cronin shipped Pitcher Buck Newsom, Shortstop Red Kress and Outfielder Buster Mills to St. Louis in exchange for Outfielder Joe Vosmik. Apparently, the Red Sox must have wanted Vosmik badly. And if there is any truth that the Red Sox sent a $35,000 bundle of cash along to St. Louis with the three players in the exchange, then they must have needed Vosmik worse than was first thought.

If that Boston-St. Louis trade can not be described any other way, it can be described as a heluva compliment to Vosmik. He must be some ball player to cause the Red Sox to separate themselves from Buck Newsom, as badly as the Red Sox need pitchers. Newsom is no super-pitcher, but he is not a bad pitcher, and he was the second-best winner on the Red Sox staff last year.

Will Vosmik Help?

Methinks that Cronin is overestimating Vosmik's value to the Red Sox. Sure, the fellow is a pretty good hitter and batted .321 last year. And he will be aiming at that short leftfield fence in Fenway Park. But he is no hot shot at driving in those runs, and, at latest reports, it still was runs that decide ball games.

I know Vosmik is no prize performer up there at the plate when the chips are down I bet on him last season to drive in more runs than a certain other hitter in the league. All season Vosmik was outhitting the fellow anywhere from 20 to 40 points. And all season the other fellow was driving in a heap more runs than Vosmik. They still pay off on the guys who can bang those runs home.

The chances are that Manager Joe Cronin made the Newsom-Vosmik trade chiefly to get rid of Newsom.

Big Buck has an incurable habit of putting the manager on the spot with his blatant outbursts when things are breaking poorly, and Cronin aparently sow no reason to risk any friction with Newsom. The fellow has a knack of becoming immensely popular with the hometown fans.

Twenty Grid Teams Clash This Week-End

Southern Methodist Plays Rice in Feature; Trojans Meet Uclans on Coast.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 3.—Down and out where the sun shines bright—and well into the winter—the football season still is a fact rather than a memory. Twenty teams of major rank clash this week-end on Southern, Southwestern and Pacific Coast gridirons in disputes of sectional and intersectional importance.

Eastern teams and their Mid-Western brothers under the pigskin already have stowed their equipment in the moth balls. But for the other 20 there'll be one last chance at glory before competitive football gives way to reminiscence on the past season or debates on the New Year's Day "Bowl" battles.

Most important nationally of ten games is the meeting at Dallas between Southern Methodist and Rice. The Owls, staging a fast finish largely on the passing proficiency of sophomore Ernie Lain, must beat S. M. U. to win the Southwest Conference title.

Defeat for Rice will mean a gift of the championship and the right to meet all-winning Colorado and Whizzer White in the Cotton Bowl, to Texas Christian, which has finished its schedule.

The Southwest also will have an entry in the day's intersectional debates, as Texas A. and M. will battle San Francisco on the latter's home grounds. Other intersectional pairings will find Manhattan at Tulsa to meet the Missouri Valley Conference champions; Duquesne at Mississippi State, and Oregon at Arizona.

The largest crowd of the day, 67,000, is expected at Los Angeles, where the University of Southern California's Trojans will be favored to win the city title from U. C. L. A.

In the "old South," there will be Southeastern Conference duels between Florida and Kentucky, Tennessee and Mississippi. A nonconference match brings together Louisiana Tech and Centenary.

Only one game of any rank is scheduled for Sunday. Loyola, of Los Angeles, will play host to Gonzaga, alma mater of Bing Crosby and present proud possessor of George (Automatic) Karamatic.

National Savings & Trust took the measure of Bureau of Investigation, 33 to 26, last night in the Southeast Community Center Basketball League at Hine Junior High. The G-Men trailed throughout the contest, but several times were within one or two points of the winner. Chilcotte, Gordon and Burrell were the boys that put the game on ice, scoring 27 of the 33 points.

Layden chimes into the offense-defense controversy with the suggestion that "if sentiment exists that the offense is overshadowed by the defense," restrictions on the shift (the full-second stop after the shift is made) be eliminated.

Beyond these proposals, the suggested changes are aimed at particular portions of the game.

Layden would establish a zone similar to that now applying to clipping, beyond which a ball carrier may get up and run after his knee touches the ground, and would lift the restrictions on running with a fumbled ball.

William P. (Hiker) Joy, of Canisius, would increase the clipping penalty from 15 to 25 yards, and expel the player committing the foul. Paul (Dizzy) McLeod, of Furman, supports the latter half of that suggestion, made on the ground that a player who has been clipped usually

Gamecocks Defeat Miami Eleven, 3-0, On 3d-Period Goal

Miami, Fla., Dec. 3 (AP).—Tom Lonchar's 20-yard field goal in the third period gave South Carolina's Gamecocks a 3-0 football victory tonight over the University of Miami before 7,543 persons.

South Carolina twice stopped Miami's attack on the 5-yard line and made one unsuccessful try for field goal before the winning score.

After Lonchar's punts had enabled the Gamecocks to reach Miami territory in the third, Kack Lyon shot a 26-yard pass to Glen Myers. Four plays later Lonchar booted the ball between the uprights. Lonchar actually stood in the 23-yard line, 8 yards behind the scrimmage line.

Miami ran up nine first downs to South Carolina's seven.

Ray Flaherty Cites Rough Giant Tactics

Redskin Coach Warns N. Y. Club and Officials to Obey Rules.

By Shirley Povich.
A Staff Correspondent.

New York, Dec. 3.—Forewarned by the Green Bay Packers that the Giants have a habit of tackling with the closed fist and slyly using their knees, Coach Ray Flaherty, of the Redskins, is prepared for eventualities Sunday.

"If that is the kind of football they want, we'll give it to 'em," said Flaherty, "but there should be no need of it. Before the game I'm going to have an understanding with the officials. We want all penalties enforced, and we'll take our chances. But the Giants had better not get gay with our club.

"The Packers didn't have to tell me what happened to them when they played the Giants in New York. The way that Green Bay Club was marked up and cut up when it came to Washington made matters plain enough. They looked as if the Giants had been using threshing machines for blocking backs.

"There are fellows in our club who can hand it out if the Giants start anything. But I don't want that kind of a ball game. We're going out to play football on Sunday. That's what we've been coached to do, and if the game gets out of hand it will be the fault of the Giants and the officials."

Expect 50,000 Fans.

Fan interest in the game has rocketed in New York during the past two days and the Giants' headquarters is being stormed for tickets, with a capacity crowd of 50,000 guaranteed. So great was the demand for seats in New York today that Owner Tim Mara refused to send another block of tickets to Washington for consumption by Redskin fans.

Approximately 4,000 tickets have already been sold in Washington and indications are that at least 5,000 Redskin "alumni" will be in the stands when the opening whistle sounds at the Polo Grounds at 2 p. m. on Sunday.

The Washington contingent will be seeing in the Giants' starting line-up two George Washington University graduates who are popular favorites in New York. Tuffy Leemans, the chief scoring hope in the Giants backfield, will have as his teammate Ray Hanken, who played at end for G. W. U. when Leemans was starring in the backfield. Hanken, a first-year sensation in the National League, quickly regained a starting berth with the Giants after recovering from an injury.

Redskins in Long Drill.

Today, Flaherty had his squad on the Westchester Country Club polo field for a workout that extended for nearly three hours. The practice tipped off the fact that the Redskins' starting backfield will be comprised of the same quartet that opened the game against the Packers—Battles, Irwin, Smith and Pinckert.

Flaherty will follow last week's strategy in restraining Baugh on the bench until late in the first quarter after the Redskins have tried their running attack against the Giants.

For a considerable portion of the workout, Quarterback Riley Smith was at one end of the field diligently practicing his place-kicks, with Sammy Baugh holding the ball. Smith's field goal talents loom as a powerful asset to the Redskins, who must get better than a tie on Sunday to qualify for the East-West playoff against the Chicago Bears.

Here in New York the Giants were still being quoted as 7-to-5 favorites today, but there were many dissenters. Heavy betters rated the Redskins at no less than even money and one football authority pointed out why.

"That 13-to-3 licking the Redskins gave the Giants in Washington early in the season is no myth," he said. "Sure, Leemans was hurt just before the end of the half and was out of the rest of the game, but folks are forgetting that the Washington club won that game with Cliff Battles in the hospital. Battles will be out there on the Polo Grounds field Sunday and you can't underestimate him."

The Giants, in their Polo Grounds workout today, stressed a defense for Sammy Baugh's passes. With Ed Danowski, famed Giant thrower, simulating Baugh, Coach Steve Owens sent his ends in fast to rush the passer, and that will be the Giants' policy on Sunday.

The Baugh-Danowski passing duel looms as a powerful side light in the Sunday proceedings. In recent games Danowski has assumed new stature as a clever passer and actually leads Baugh in the percentage of completions.

Major Loop Chiefs Start Chicago Trek

Little 'Fireworks' Seen as Minor Meeting Closes Business.

By the Associated Press.

Milwaukee, Wis., Dec. 4.—Major league baseball traders marched on Chicago tonight, ready to touch off a blast of selling and buying "fireworks" which failed to explode with more than a mild "pop" at the minor league's thirty-sixth annual meeting.

There was plenty of activity as the convention wound up its business, but it wasn't of the "ivory" market variety. Big league managers, owners and scouts poured out of hotels in a mass movement toward Chicago and the American and National League sessions which open Monday.

Expectancy prevailed that the Van Lingle Mungo deal would break before the leagues held their joint session next Wednesday. Throughout the minor sessions reports were rampant that the Brooklyn Dodger pitching ace would change uniforms—going either to the New York Giants or Chicago Cubs. Another rumor heard today was that Manager Jimmy Dykes, of the Chicago White Sox, wanted Rudy York, young Detroit catcher, but it was deemed unlikely that Mickey Cochrane would dispose of his hard-hitting backstop.

Three all major league transactions stood completed:

(1) Chicago sent Vern Kennedy, Dixie Walker and Tony Piet to Detroit for Marvin Owen, Gerald Walker and Mike Tresh.

(2) St. Louis' Browns traded Joe Vosmik to Boston's Red Sox for Buck Newsom, Buster Mills and Ralph (Red) Kress.

(3) Washington traded pitcher Ed Linke to the Browns for southpaw Elon Hogsett.

Judge W. G. Bramham was re-elected president of the National Association of minor Leagues for five years with a salary increase from $12,500 to $20,000 annually. The offices of vice president and secretary were combined and J. H. Farrell, treasurer since 1901, will draw salary through 1938 and then receive an annuity.

No action was taken on the minor-major pact which expires next February and representatives of both the minor and major leagues will discuss its renewal at Chicago. Also to come up for discussion next week will be regulations governing the signing of college players.

Capital Satire Returns 'Home' In Film Form

"FIRST LADY." Warner Brothers picturization of the stage play by Katherine Dayton and George S. Kaufman, adapted to the screen by Rowland Leigh, starring Kay Francis, with Verea Teasdale, Walter Connolly, Preston Foster, Anita Louise, Victor Jory, Marjorie Rambeau, Louise Fazenda, Henry O'Neill, Grant Mitchell, Lucille Gleason, Sara Haden, Harry Davenport, Gregory Gaye and Eric Stanley. Directed by Stanley Logan. Reviewed Friday afternoon by Mary Harris. At the Earle Theater.

Armored with a cast of Hollywood's biggest names, shining glassily with double-edged feminine comedy, "First Lady" offers one of the most attractive amusement bets of the pre-holiday season.

By this time, everyone certainly knows that "First Lady" is laid in Washington and concerns the savage social warfare of two women of official position each of whom aspires to be White House chatelaine.

Warner Brothers, though, positively disclaim the inspiration of personalities, but state cryptically and importantly that the story "might have happened." The gossipy and intelligent Washington public will probably turn the Warner statement inside out and say that the story could not have happened, but that the super-acid content of the heroines' conversation is quite in the manner of any number of Capitol society women.

Those who wish to take lessons in the art of insult can hardly do better than to study Kay Francis and Veree Teasdale as the respectiye wives of the Secretary of State and a Supreme Court Justice. These distinguished dames scalp and apply the Chinese torture to each other with exquisite courtesy.

Plot Nicely Contrived.

A couple of neat back-flips give smartness to the plot. Kay Francis, wishing to set a fire under her rival by inspiring baseless hopes, finds that she has unwittingly started a real Presidential boom for the rival's doddering husband. The boom must be uprooted by almost any old means, since Kay is determined that her own husband shall be President. So-o-o, she discovers that Miss Teasdale's marriage isn't strictly legal, with the result that the poor old justice retires from the Presidential race because of "ill health."

This role will not add to Kay Francis' acting laurels, neither will it detract much from her box-office popularity. She plays it as sweetly as possible, although the role naturally calls for bravado and high humor. Veree Teasdale is cool and capable as Kay's best critic and worst friend.

Walter Connolly is at his best (and what a best!) as the Supreme Court justice who gets on his wife's nerves by liking the radio and detective stories. Preston Foster's part simply offers nothing for him to do about it. Willy-nilly, he is just another State Department stuffed shirt. Nor does Anita Louise fare better. Her fate is to be pretty and silly. Victor Jory fits loosely into a Senatorial role. But our old pal, Louise Fazenda, is nothing less than gaw-geous as a professional do-gooder and clubwoman, mouthing catchwords and slogans in lieu of conversation. Sara Haden, too, is swell as Fazenda's pop-eyed little yes-woman. Marjorie Rambeau, a great name of day-before-yesterday, plays suavely and cynically as a mature woman who knows her way around in the jungle of Washington society.

"First Lady" thus rates another moviegoer "must." It will both amuse you and give you something to think about.

Lopez Hits Again.

Vincent Lopez, wizard of the piano (especially with his magical right paw), brings Washington a pre-Christmas present of rather gigantic proportions.

We mean Johnny Woods, the radio personality impersonator, who will refresh the most fagged Christmas shopper. This remarkable kid rates the title of artist for his verbal cartoons of radio figures. Fred Lowery, who can outwhistle any whistler we've ever heard, and shag-dancers Nichols and Robert, are other especial Lopez adornments.

A football special showing the trickiest plays of the year tops the newsreel, while a Charlies Chase comedy shows him getting into, out of and under beds—all for excellent reasons.

Palace

With an elaborated story of the Napoleonic wars in Spain and the Rudolf Friml score—one of his most melodious—preserved virtually intact, "The Firefly" sang and thundered its way into a second consecutive week at Loew's Palace Theater yesterday.

In this magnificently staged screen operetta, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer presents Jeanette MacDonald and Allan Jones as the lyrical stars, supported by a cast of excellent selection, led in the nonmusical sequences by Warren William. The story unfolded is one of rival secret services, Miss MacDonald impersonating the agent of one side, Mr. Jones the other. Their romance is punctuated by many exciting events and lilting songs and finally smoothed by a clever ruse on the part of the fair spy to save both her country and her lover.

In addition to the original numbers remembered from the original stage work, two new songs have been added to the present film version, the more distinctive of the two being the clever and quaintly humorous "Donkey Serenade." Miss MacDonald, furthermore, appears as a dancer for the first time in her present assignment, which has been produced on a lavishly spectacular scale and photographed with effective tinting.

The supplementary attractions are commensurate with the superb quality of a major feature that must be catalogued as the finest filmusical so far produced, from every viewpoint of visual and auricular beauty.

Guess Who?

Douglas Fowler's friends are mystified as to the identity of the possible recipient, but the actor who plays in "Love and Hisses," has been haunting jewelry shops examining and comparing diamond engagement rings.

Dixie's Toy.

Dixie Dunbar at last has found a dog her own size. He is a toy bulldog and is fully grown, but stands only 5 inches to the shoulder. She calls him "Pooey," and he rides on her shoulder, since he isn't big enough to keep up with her.

Nelson B. Bell About The Showshops

Revelry, Music and Dancing Mark Gay Bill at the Capitol

Capacity Crowds Applaud Rare Combination of Merry Frivolities.

"DOUBLE WEDDING." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of Ferenc Molnar's play, "The Great Love," adapted to the screen by Lo Swerling, with musical score by Edward Ward, co-starring William Powell and Myrna Loy, with Florence Rice, John Beal, Jessie Ralph, Edgar Kennedy, Sidney Toler, Mary Gordon, Barnett Parker, Katherine Alexander, Priscilla Lawson and Bert Roach. Directed by Richard Thorpe. Previewed Tuesday, November 30. At Loew's Capitol Theater.

As a shining example—and "shining" is precisely the word—of the spectacular manner in which comedy, music, dancing, color and movement may best be combined to compound an hilariously entertaining program of screen and stage diversion, the new bill at Loew's Capitol Theater yesterday completely justified all of the fuss and feathers of last night's gala "Hollywood premiere." It is a "show" of such merit as to live up to any inaugural ballyhoo, no matter how pretentious or extravagant.

BELL.

"Double Wedding" is an ideally lunatic screen farce to set a swift and gay pace for the second edition of the "Hollywood Hotel Revue" that follows it on the stage. It engendered cyclones of laughter yesterday afternoon, with a packed house, almost as limp as Mr. Powell and Miss Loy were, applauding it enthusiastically at the final fadeout when a riotous closing sequence had left the principal figures in the story hors de combat on the floor of Mr. Powell's fabulous auto-trailer.

William Powell, in this thoroughly insane subject is cast as one Charlie Lodge, playboy artist, with a vast distaste for physical effort and a regimented life. Under his influence, two youngsters—one a "mouse of a man"; the other an ingenuous but wholly dominated ycunger sister of a tremendously successful fashion designer with a yen for ordering other peoples' lives—plan to elope to Hollywood and be actors. Through them Charlie makes the informal and impetuous acquaintance of the handsome modiste, who minds the world's business with the aid of a clock, trick menus and a minutely detailed philosophy of a dull and stupid life. Myrna Loy is this orderly young woman; John Beal and Florence Rice, the kids who hope to be married. It is from this preliminary situation and deploying of contrasting characters that the comedy derives its title. That there will be two weddings instead of one is obvious from the start.

A Melange of Absurdities.

To attempt any outline of how all this is brought about would be to set down a sketchy outline of a steady succession of the goofiest farcical developments that have recently been transferred to celluloid. The action shifts from "Charlie Horse" Lodge's trailer, parked on a midcity lot, next to a cheap groggery, to Margit Andrews' chromium, plate glass and velour apartment. The one is as orderly as the vagabond camp in the opening scenes of "My Man Godfrey;" the other a model of gold-plated and methodical boredom.

Out of these opposite environs spring the utterly silly incidents that dangle from a fairly articulated skeleton of "plot." The culmination of the action reaches the tempestuous dimensions of a riot of imposing proportions in which, as has been indicated, both Mr. Powell and Miss Loy are laid out cold, beneath a floral horseshoe bearing the questionable legend, "Good Luck."

The stars, of course, are adepts at this sort of thing, but no more skillful in taking seriously the most flippant and impossible requirements of the play than Florence Rice and John Beal. Mr. Beal does an uncommonly fine piece of work as the browbeaten and "whipped" youth who finally acquires his share of "yumph." Others who chip in with their bits of hilarity are Jessie Ralph, Sidney Toler, Edgar Kennedy, Barnett Parker and Katherine Alexander, not to mention the barroom quartet that persists in singing "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow," and the gardener who does not water the lawn on clear days, but does in torrential cloudbursts. The whole merry business is more or less like that!

A Ziegfeldian Revue.

The new "Hollywood Hotel Revue" is almost as impossible of detailed specification as the picture. It is a huge, colorful and fast-moving Ziegfeldian glorification of glamour and pulchritude, heavily coated with fun, alive with flashy music and dancing and a little audacious, at times, in its cutaneous display of the physical charms of the "36 gorgeous Hollywood starlets," comprising "America's fastest dancing chorus."

Marty May acts as a belated master of ceremonies and contributes two intervals of lively fun, assisted in one of them by two audience stooges who tell him plenty. Helen Honan costars in her clever impersonations, and Clark and Eaton, unique dance stars, and May McKim and Her Boy Friends, three in number, prove that Eddie Cantor was right—"swing is here to sway." Mariona, Anita Del Carmen, Spanish dancer; Wilma Horner, Robert Berry, barytone, and those dazzling show girls further people a sumptuously staged recrudescence of the gorgeousness of the "Follies" in their heyday.

The Fox Movietone News is the only auxiliary of a bill that evidently has the house record in the back of its mind.

'West of Shanghai' Based on 'Bad Man' Formula by Same Author.

"WEST OF SHANGHAI." Warner Brothers picturization of a story by Porter Emerson Browne, adapted to the screen by Crane Wilbur, starring Boris Karloff, supported by Ricardo Cortez, Beverly Roberts, Gordon Oliver and Sheila Bromley. Directed by John Farrow. Reviewed Friday night by Dorothea Lewis.

This is not war, this is bandits—or more properly and grammatically A Bandit, a thoroughly delightful, thoroughly impossible, thoroughly ruthless gentleman who looks Chinese and answers to the name of Fang but who is definitely the Bad Man reincarnated, or just transplanted from old West Mexico, to the Far East.

There are the same slips in slang, the same profanity for accent, the same charming disregard for right and wrong, which works out very well for the people with consciences who have solutions of their problems worked out and forced upon them by the gentleman without a conscience. And the problems are the same, too, a lack of money and the presence of a surplus husband. Boris Karloff is perfectly swell as Fang.

This is, not at all incidentally, a surprising and pleasantly quiet picture for a bandit saga—more philosophy and soft-voiced masterminding than wholesale carnage, until the very end. Also most of the bullets are well and satisfactorily placed, except for those that put a regrettable end to Fang and his self-made career.

Just at this point, we stopped writing and got around to hunting up our play catalogue to look up the author of "The Bad Man" and surprise, surprise! It is Porter Emerson Browne! Yes sir, the same Mr. Porter Emerson Browne given screen credit up there in the fine print for the "story of 'West of Shanghai'." That ought to make us a real detective or something and it certainly makes Fang the Bad Man. Mr. Browne's name on the screen didn't mean a thing to us. "The Bad Man" always meant actor Holbrook Blinn, up to now.

Interesting and Amusing.

Anyhow, "West of Shanghai," whatever its antecedents, is lots more fun than we thought it would be and generally amusing and interesting, as it tells its story of two white women and four white men in the hands of Bandit Fang and his "tough guys."

It is Mr. Karloff's picture and he is, as you must know, quite a nice actor behind all that make-up. In this disguise he is completely at ease and completely charming. He receives support from Ricardo Cortez, Beverly Roberts, Sheila Bromley, Gordon Oliver, who is an engaging but rather unexpressive young man, and, in particular, from his bodyguard and slang coach, Mr. Cheng.

The host of subsidiaries is headed by "Pure Feud," featuring that other smoothie and grandfather of wisdom Master Charles McCarthy who, from his vantage point on Edgar Bergen's knee, might give even Bandit Fang some pointers. There is an item entitled "Little Red Walking Hood" (Uugh!), the newsreel and an Edgar Kennedy comedy, "Edgar and Goliath," which amused some folks mightily and us not at all.

Trans-Lux

W, W W, and then W again, at the Trans-Lux Theater this week. With White House (temporary), Water, Washington and What not, it is an all-around, all-inclusive news parade of "these here" world parts.

It all depends upon what you like best as to how to say what the top-notch section of this all-colorful newsreel bill really is. The President fishing, with side shots of his temporary White House at Miami, in charge of Secretary Marvin McIntyre, and Vice President Garner's sojourn in the hunting business, ties for topnotch with the most thrilling and breath-taking shots of a trio of outboard boats racing in Southern waters.

The paramount section of the bill, as usual is the news section. Lowell Thomas describes the back stage workings of New York City's giant telephone system, and the healthiest girl and boy of the famous agricultural 4-H clubs exchange views as to just how it happened. Also in the news we see Mr. Simpson, with the new Mrs. Simpson, sailing for England, and more thrills with the outrigger canoe sailors of New Guinea.

Football scenes galore get the best laughs and thrills when we see the shoeless football team of Lynchburg, Va., in action.

The City of the Golden Gate is a magnificent short in colors depicting the famous landmarks of San Francisco. "Stranger Than Fiction" brings us stone (pumice) that floats, and wood that sinks, all from the same locality.

The latest fashions for milady and a clever Betty Boop cartoon complete the entertaining bill.

Young Gentlemen of Gridiron Get Playful and Wreck Studio

Director Woody S. Van Dyke Reveals Hidden Talent by Turning Bulls Loose in His China Shop and Gets Some Fine Results.

Fifty bulls in a china shop, and you can have the pieces.

Fifty football players on a movie sound stage can produce the same result—if you don't handle them right. On the other hand, follow the tactics of W. S. (Woody) Van Dyke and you cannot possibly go wrong.

Woody is the director of "Rosalie," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's supermusical. His script carries him all the way from West Point to the European kingdom of Romanza. And, of course, he deals with soldiers everywhere. The soldiers are all right, but you've got to watch them when they are football players.

The opening sequences of "Rosalie" depict exciting moments during an Army-Navy game. Nelson Eddy and Ray Bolger of the main cast hold the limelight. To support them must be two complete football teams, together with miscellaneous substitutes.

Obtaining young men for these roles is a simple enough thing in itself. The studio merely appeals to the huge University of Southern California, or its arch-rival, University of California at Los Angeles, and presto! the lads swarm out.

Val Dyke had them on the field at 6:30 in the morning. An autumn morning at that, but amazingly hot, in one of those belated heat spells that occasionally come around to annoy.

The script called for Nelson Eddy to plunge thmrough the Navy line, toss a lateral to Ray Bolger, his teammate. Then Bolger, surrounded by Navy men, would lateral back to his Army pal and a touchdown would result.

Cameras were set up in short order and the routine was worked out. They tried it a few times, selecting the proper path for Eddy and Bolger to take through the opposing line.

Then came the "take." The two film players slid through the line and snaked through the opposition. Nelson lateraled. Bolger caught it—barely. Then the Navy smothered him, but the ball flipped back into Nelson's arms, and he was across for the touchdown.

So far, so good. The "hired" football players followed the routine exactly as prescribed. They even finished it up with the prescribed tackle which came too late behind the goal posts. That particular tackle did the damage. When Nelson got up he was sadder, wiser, and lame. Two hours later, back again at the studio, his leg was bandaged so he could finish out the day.

But was Eddy angered over the mishap? Not at all. Football players aren't accustomed to making concessions. Realism had its way and that was that.

One of the prop men on the set made a bad mistake. He spent an hour telling the boys whenever possible that ULCA would beat U. S. C. at the close of the season. Perhaps he hadn't bothered to check up on the number of Trojan men on hand. Van Dyke saw them rankle under the razzing. Suddenly he spoke up to several of the athletes:

"Go get the guy, but don't hurt him."

It was the signal for a small riot—fifty bulls lose in a china shop. Less than a minute later the prop man was taking a cold shower, still fully dressed, while 50 grinning boys watched the fun. Another minute later he was perched atop a chair singing, peculiarly enough, a song called "Fight On for Old S. C." . . .

The riot did not end there. This was, indeed, a very warm day—95 or so in the shade. The big sound stage was even warmer. Banks of floodlights increased the discomfiture. So the boys took the tip from this shower episode and ran wild in the next 15 minutes with water buckets, splashing the contents on anybody within striking distance.

Van Dyke loved it, of course. He let them go to it, keeping an eye out only for things of value. Cold water cooled many a fevered brow, and it didn't hurt the actors any, for this was a scene in the dressing rooms between halves of a football game, and the boys were supposed to be perspiring like Niagara Falls.

When the water had spilled long enough, the boys were satisfied. The noise subsided without a command from Van Dyke and work resumed as if nothing had happened.

Smart man, this Van Dyke. When 50 huskies get impatient, turn 'em loose for some fun. Don't bawl the pants off of 'em. Not if you want good results and a good picture.

Golfer.

The favorite diversion of W. C. Fields is playing golf. His liking for the game led to his creation of the golf routine which he presents in "The Big Broadcast of 1938."

Katharine Hepburn always eats at the directors' table, always shakes dice for the check—and hasn't paid for a lunch in months. Wish I could rid myself of my first prejudice against Tyrone Power's beauty. Things that puzzle me: Is Craig Reynolds really the most friendly of men—or has he just discovered a good formula for Hollywood success? The one star every famous out-of-towner wants to meet is Shirley Temple. That "Lester Strasser," whose water colors have attracted attention in Southern California art salons, is J. Edward Bromberg, the screen villain.

If masculine votes only were counted, Mary Maguire would rate near the top in a Hollywood popularity contest. Looks like a harmonious winter, with 16 big musicals ready for release or shooting. Seen in any fashionable night spot: Rochelle Hudson, always with a new escort—and always looking bored. When louder shirts are seen, they will probably be seen on the torso of Barton McLane.

Watchel the filming of mob scenes for the super-musical which W. S. Van Dyke is directing. "Van" seethed while his assistants tried to get a semblance of quiet on the set. Finally the extras stopped milling about and Van turned on his loud speaker and started giving them detailed instructions for the scene. Midway through his orders, he was interrupted by someone talking and laughing. Wheeling, he pointed an accusing finger and shouted furiously, "I'll stop that!" Then the crowd parted, permitting him to see the culprit. It was Mrs. Van Dyke, just arrived on the set for a visit.

Somewhere near Hollywood—no one seems to know just where—is the new hideaway of Hollywood's four inseparable pals, Carole Lombard, Clark Gable, Gail Patrick and her husband, Bob Cobb. None of their friends is ever invited to "drop in" for they are determined to keep the location a secret. Only this much is known—the place is well stocked with saddle horses and dogs. Clark boasts, grimly, that each dog is trained to attack candid cameramen.

The happiest youngster in Hollywood is Marjorie Weaver, a Kentucky miss who recently stepped into an important role in a picture co-starring Loretta Young and Claire Trevor. Marjorie has been using an ordinary canvas dressing room on the set. This morning, arriving for work, she found in its place the swank "portable" that Loretta has always used. "Go on—it's yours now," Loretta urged. "The studio has given me a new one." Marjorie opened the door. The old dressing room, completely redecorated, was banked with flowers. On the dressing table was a card which read: "The dressing room belongs to the studio—the decorations and flowers are a token of our confidence. We think you are a winner—don't disappoint us." It was signed by Loretta and Claire.

Gregory Ratoff (I wish his accent could be put on paper) went to a kennel the other day, wrote a check for $125 and took home with him one of the finest Irish setters in town. And every night, at nine o'clock, he takes the dog out for a stroll. Fido, being a headstrong mutt, tugs hard against his leash and Gregory's shouted commands make no impression. A few nights ago, Wesley Ruggles, an authority on the training of dogs, was Ratoff's dinner guest, and accompanied him when he took the setter out for the nightly battle. "Gregory," said Wes, "you've got to teach that dog to mind. He doesn't know that you're his master." "He should!" shouted Ratoff. "With his own eyes, he saw me write a check for him!"

Screen Version Of Noted Play Continues Run

'Stage Door,' With a Star Cast, Presents Strong Drama at Keith's.

Continuing for a second week its intriguing depiction of what happens at a girls' theatrical boarding house in New York, "Stage Door" offers Ginger Rogers minus her dancing ensembles, and Hepburn, minus much of her former cold reading of lines.

True, Ginger does engage in a few triple taps, and Hepburn does turn out a few well-bred nifties, but this is all incidental to the development of the plot. Ginger is the wisecracker of the dingy boarding house where young girls pool their dreams after cooling their heels outside casting offices. Hepburn is the rich girl who comes with too much baggage, ready to be signed for stardom.

Roommates they become, but not friends until the death of another roomer makes Hepburn a great actress and makes Ginger forget Heppie stole her theatrical producer. Menjou, the producer, a sly and wily fellow, has previously befriended Gail Patrick. Cynical Ginger, sans sophistry, is an easy mark for his flattery; suspicious Hepburn matches wits and so he makes her a star.

Nice fairy tale. Did YOU ever crash a producer's office? While this may be a myth, the delineation of the young and mostly lovely girls who inhabit the Club is fine and true. There is heartbreak, flippancy, death and marriage—and a group of fast-talking, young would-be Bernhardts who manage to make you believe for a while that youth and courage are all the weapons one needs in modern warfare.

Good for the entire family. Mark up scores for Rogers, Hepburn, Menjou, Constance Collier, and the whole cast. Andrea Leeds and Lucille Ball have been handed accolades aplenty, but here is another bunch.

The "March of Time" has an interesting discussion of the Alaskan salmon war, being waged between Japanese and American fishermen in teeming Northern waters. England's fever for soccer-game betting also is discussed.

In the news, Pathe's advisory board picks an All-American football team; the President fishes; six-day bikers race and naval parachuters jump. In a colored cartoon, Pluto, Disney's dawg, is amusingly present with wife and "Pluto's Quin-puplets."

Profit - Taking Checks Jump In Wheat Price

Heavy Selling Cuts Into Early Rise of 2⅜ Cents a Bushel.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Dec. 3.—With severe damage both from frost and draught now conceded regarding Argentine crops, wheat rose 2⅜ cents a bushel in Chicago today, but later reacted.

Heavy selling to realize profits for recent buyers of wheat did much to cause price setbacks at the last, largely canceling today's gains. Reports current indicated that Argentina would have only 52,000,000 bushels of wheat available for shipment to Europe this season, and that throughout large areas the Argentine yield would be of inferior quality.

At the close, Chicago wheat futures were ½ cent lower to 1 cent higher, compared with yesterday's finish; December, 94⅞@95; May, 92⅛@92⅝; July, 86⅛@86¼; corn, ⅛@⅞ up; December, 53⅜@53¾; May, 56⅝@56¾; oats, unchanged to ⅛ advance; rye varying from ¼ cent decline to $¾ bulge, and provisions showing 15 to 20 cents jump.

Stocks Advance in More Active Trading Under Leadership of Steel Shares.

New York, Dec. 3.—Stocks continued their advance in more active trading. Leading issues were able to show gains of 2 to 6 points at the best on a total turnover of around 1,600,000 shares, the largest in a week. United States bonds were irregular on the approach of new financing, but other bonds were strong. May wheat was unchanged at 92⅝ cents a bushel.

With all but a few stock groups participating, the advance in stocks was tops for the past week or more. Sales volume increased as prices worked higher and fell on the setbacks. A fairly steady opening was followed by a mild recession, after which the advance was resumed. Best prices were touched on two or three spurts, and in the last hour some shading of the highest levels took place. Short covering was reported in a few leading issues.

Steel Shares Strong.

Steel and chemical shares were buoyant, and the electric equipments had their best day in a long time. Steel rose more than 2 points in selling above 59. Bethlehem picked up 3 points. Inland jumped over 4 points on one sale. National Steel forged ahead. The chemical group was led by du Pont, which climbed 5 points to a price more than 20 points above last week's lowest. Columbian Carbon was impressive. Southern Pacific was the most active of a firm railroad group.

Even the motor shares found conditions more favorable. General Motors and Chrysler chipped in with 1 and 2 point gains. Coppers were active and higher, and oil shares easily made headway. Rail equipments moved with their best customers, but utilities were backward. Gold stocks worked against the trend. Homestake and McIntyre dropped a point or so. Merchandising shares improved. Airplanes were given a good deal of attention. Eastman, Coca-Cola, United Fruit and Owens Glass stood up 3 to 8 points. Wheeling Steel preferred climbed 15 points on one sale. The preferreds of Electric Power and American Power jumped 3 to 6 points.

Rally Continues.

The late rally in stocks yesterday, begun by the railroad shares, was continued today and some justification for it, in addition to the general considerations of an oversold position and reaction from the recent extremes of pessimism, was found in the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission to grant the petition of the Western railroads for higher passenger fares. The rates, the railroads estimate, will add $2,500,000 to their revenues, which is not a great deal so far as earnings are concerned. What the market liked best about the affair was the willingness shown by the ICC to help the roads overcome the effects of the fall in business. It is now assumed that the request of Eastern lines for higher passenger fares will be granted, and then the all-around rise in freight rates will complete the job.

Higher charges won't put the railroads in a stronger position, unless at the same time they can secure some increase in traffic. The answer to that depends on general business activity. Meanwhile, something can be done (in theory, at least) to cut operating expenses. Railroad shares acted better today, but trading enthusiasm centered elsewhere. On other counts the industrial news was not particularly illuminating. Government officials offered their say in Washington at the housing hearings, but the whole discussion turns on the question of loans, while the main obstacle to building continues to be the high wage scales in effect among the building trades and the popular enxiety lest the country is headed for another severe business depression.

Bullish.

Now for the bullish side, and this from our favorite stock market letter writer: "Going back over 40 years of security movements and trade we find that, when business and securities have been on the decline for the last half of any one year, the year immediately following starts out on a note of optimism and hope. The records indicate that in all these periods of decline and depression, there were decided recoveries from the low levels of November or December into January, February or March of the succeeding year—irrespective of what happened later. One might prophesy—irrespective of the longer term picture which is still somewhat obscure—that stocks bought in December of this year might be disposed of somewhere between January and March of 1938 at worthwhile profits. An examination of the Nation's inventory situation confirms the opinion that there could be a decided stimulation in new material purchases in the immediate future. It would be rash indeed to attempt crystal gazing beyond 90 days, or to forecast the long-term effects of well-intentioned attempts at immediate recovery. We do believe that, based upon mass psychology, past statistics and present inventory conditions, there is sufficient groundwork to venture the prophecy that stocks bought around current levels could show substantial profits by the spring of next year."

Life Insurance Held Backlog In Hard Times

Expert Is Guest Speaker at D. C. Underwriters' Monthly Meeting.

By Thomas M. Cahill.

Presenting an illuminating analysis of public interest in life insurance, James Elton Bragg, chartered life underwriter and agency executive, said yesterday that the human element in this institution was responsible for its great growth and strength.

Mr. Bragg, who lectures on life insurance at New York University and is manager of the New York City agency of the Guardian Life Insurance Co., was the guest speaker at the monthly luncheon meeting of the District of Columbia Life Underwriters Association at the Willard Hotel.

He told local insurance men that this fundamental element of vitality in the institution of life insurance was forcefully revealed during 1929 to 1935. While the national debt increased by some $8,000,000,000 during that period, due to the needs of people for relief, the speaker reminded that payments by American life insurance companies to policyholders and beneficiaries during the six-year period amounted to $18,000,000,000.

He also emphasized that these companies had approximately the latter amount in accumulated investment funds of policyholders' equities in 1929, which were not used to make the six-year payments to policyholders, and at the end of the six years of depression the life companies' assets had actually increased by more than $7,000,000,000. Payments had been made from the current income of the companies, because, in spite of hard times, policyholders, as a group, did pay their premiums.

While thousands of persons had to surrender or lapse policies because their individual earnings had been curtailed or stopped, he recalled that other policyholders continued to pay millions of dollars throughout those years of economic stress. Those who were able to pay their premiums supplied a current income to pay those who had to call upon the companies for payments.

In times of financial constraint, Mr. Bragg said, the individual might withdraw his savings from the bank; he might "dump" his securities on the market; he might cash his building and loan savings, but the very last asset that he would liquidate for emergency uses would be his life insurance policy, which guarantees sustenance to his loved ones if he should die.

This, Mr. Bragg concluded, is one of the fundamental elements of strength in life insurance—the fact that life insurance policies are not only investment funds, accumulated for reasons of self-interest, but that they also include guarantees of the completion of those resources for beneficiaries in the event policyholders die. This noble trait in human nature—the desire of the thinking individual to protect his dear ones—makes life insurance savings have a peculiarly different quality from every other form of thrift, he believes.

T. Bedford Jones, McKinley High School student, was presented with a check for $25 awarded to him by the judges of the National Association of Life Underwriters for his letter on insurance entered in the National High School Letter Writing Contest.

Policy Sales Increase.

Local life insurance sales for the first ten months of the current year now aggregate $61,988,000, which marks 6 per cent increase over the corresponding period a year ago, the monthly report of Life Insurance Sales Research Bureau, of Hartford, Conn., indicates. The local advance for the comparative period is 2 per cent ahead of the average gain for the Nation.

Similar advances of 6 per cent were announced for Maryland, Virginia and South Carolina, while North Carolina showed a rise of 4 per cent and West Virginia registered a 3 per cent upturn. The District of Columbia's volume of new business totaled $4,783,000 in October, a decline of 20 per cent, compared with the month last year.

Maryland sales receded 2 per cent in the month's comparison, amounting to $8,179,000. Virginia sales were off 3 per cent with new policies aggregating $7,544,000. New business amounting to $8,041,000 was written in North Carolina, which was 5 per cent under that of the volume in October, 1936. The South Carolina total was $3,497,000, a 12 per cent decrease. West Virginia was the only State in the local district to show a gain, its October figure of $5,243,000, reflecting an increase of 3 per cent over the month in 1936.

Sales for entire country totaled $579,704,000 in October, which was the same as the total for the month in 1936. Ten months' volume for the United States now stands at $6,031,079,000, a 4 per cent gain over the comparative period a year ago. For the year, Washington sales are in advance of those of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and St. Louis, equal to Los Angeles but behind Chicago and Cleveland in percentage gains. St. Louis leads the foregoing cities in October with a 12 per cent advance.

New York Is Lead.

At the close of 1936, New York headed a list with a per capita insurance average of $1,035 and the District of Columbia was second with a per capita average of $992. Maryland's average of insurance in force was $631; Virginia's, $357; West Virginia's, $353; North Carolina's, $284; South Carolina's, $226. The National average was $564.

Manager Harold D. Krafft reports the Washington agency of the Provident Mutual Life Insurance Co. announces appointment of H. Gordon Edmonds as supervisor.

Fundamental Investors.

Directors of Fundamental Investors, Inc., a mutual investment trust, declared a dividend of $0.50 per share, payable December 21, 1937, to stockholders of record December 10. This compares with a dividend of $0.25 per share paid in each of the three previous quarters of 1937 and totals $1.25 per share for the full year. The stock will sell former dividends as of the opening of business December 9.

Alleghany Merger To Be Abandoned

Cleveland, Dec. 3 (AP).—Proposed merger of Alleghany Corporation and the Chesapeake Corporation was abandoned today by directors of the two companies in a joint meeting here. In a prepared statement the directors announced:

"Directors of Alleghany Corporation today approved a plan of amending, with the consent of bondholders, the indenture securing the 1950 bonds of the corporation. This plan provides for purchase of the bonds with cash deposited under the indenture.

"The Alleghany directors, as well as directors of the Chesapeake Corporation, authorized abandonment of the plan of consolidation dated July 8, 1937. This plan had contemplated merger of the two corporations into a new company to be called the Chesapeake Corporation."

District Jury Frees Creech of Perjury Charge

Senate Gets Third Rebuff as Harlan Mine Official Is Acquitted.

Ted Creech, 6-foot mine superintendent of "Bloody" Harlan County, Ky., was acquitted of perjury in District Court late yesterday by a jury which deliberated 90 minutes.

As the jurors announced their verdict, there was an outburst of applause which subsided when deputy marshals shouted for order. Within a few minutes Creech, surrounded by a group of attorneys, was on his way out.

Accused by La Follette.

Creech, whose father owns and controls mines in the Harlan district, was tried in connection with statements given to the La Follette Civil Liberties Committee.

He was said to have approached Richard C. Tackett, principal prosecution witness, in the hallway outside the hearing room and to have threatened him for statements made about conditions in Harlan County. Recalled to the stand as a result of Tackett's statement, Creech said he told Tackett, in substance, that he had messed up the operators and ought to get 8 or 10 years when he got back.

Surrounded by melodramatic incidents, which included the searching of all persons entering the courtroom, the trial was begun just before Thanksgiving. David A. Pine, chief assistant United States Attorney, consumed four days presenting the Government's side of the incident, while William E. Leahy and William J. Hughes, defense attorneys, took up the balance.

Indictments Obtained.

The conversation between Tackett and Creech on April 16 was the sole bone of contention. When Senator La Follette heard of the incident, he recalled both Tackett and Creech to the stand.

Soon afterward, he obtained the indictment of Creech on the allegation the man had falsified his later testimony.

Throughout the trial, Tackett insisted that he be excused from disclosing his present address, fearing reprisals. He attended every session, occupying a seat in the rear of the courtroom with his back to the wall. He vanished before the jury reentered with its verdict.

The case is the third in which the Senate has been rebuffed. The others involved officials of the Railway Audit and Inspection Co.

Marinelli Quits N.Y. Post Under Fire of Dewey

Tammany District Boss Says He Doesn't Want Friends Embarrassed.

By the Associated Press.

Albany, N. Y., Dec. 3.—Albert Marinelli Tammany district boss, resigned today the $15,000 a year job as New York County clerk, which Manhattan's Republican prosecutor-elect, Thomas E. Dewey, said he was unfit to hold.

He submitted the resignation, effective immediately, to Democratic Gov. Herbert H. Lehman less than two days after the Governor called upon him to answer by next Monday sworn charges that he was a political ally of thugs and racketeers.

Marinelli's term of office would have expired automatically December 31.

Marinelli, who since 1931 has ruled his lower East Side bailiwick by old-fashioned political methods, referred in his letter to the fact that Dewey, special rackets prosecutor in Manhattan since 1935, summoned 300 of his neighborhood acquaintances before two grand juries investigating his political life.

"I cannot and will not, no matter at what cost to me, cause any further suffering and humiliation to those people," he wrote. "There are but four weeks remaining to my term of office. It is too brief a time to justify all of the suffering and humiliation that might result to them from a public hearing."

The Governor, if he had found Marinelli's answer an insufficient defense, could have put him on trial at a public hearing, as did his predecessor, Franklin D. Roosevelt, with former Mayor James J. Walker, in 1932 after the Seabury investigation. Walker resigned during progress of the hearing.

Deputy County Clerk Andrew B. Keating automatically succeeded Marinelli.

G-Men Saving Each Citizen $7, Hoover Claims

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 3.—J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, today announced "dividends" to taxpayers of $7 for every dollar spent on the bureau.

He said that during the last four years the cost of operating the F. B. I. amounted to a little more than $18,000,000, while it was able to return "in savings, in fines and in recoveries of stolen goods a total of more than $135,000,000, or more than $116,000,000 above what it costs to operate the bureau."

Hoover, addressing the association of life insurance presidents, attacked parole systems (excluding the Federal), the failure of police units to co-operate in the collection of statistical data and criminal records, jail conditions, shyster lawyers, venal politics and "kid glove treatment" of criminals.

"The records of the F. B. I. show that 55 per cent of all criminals arrested have been previously arrested for other crimes," he said. "The records also show that approximately 40 per cent of all prisoners now are being released on parole.

"Thirty per cent of the 13,519 dangerous criminals listed at the F. B. I. as the country's most desperate kidnapers, racketeers, hoodlums, bank robbers and extortioners show a record of having been the recipients of parole or other types of clemency.

F. H. Allen Dies; Helped to Found War Escadrille

Frederick Hobbes Allen, lawyer and economist and one of the committee of four which formed the Lafayette Escadrille in Paris in 1916, died at his home in Newport, R. I., yesterday, the Associated Press reported. He was 79 years old and a native of Hawaii.

Formation of the escadrille by the committee was at the instance of James Norman Prince, then a member of the French Foreign Legion, whose memory will be honored at ceremonies Monday at Washington Cathedral, where he is buried. Prince was killed in aerial combat.

During the war Allen was a commander in the United States Naval Reserve aviation and served as aide to the commander of United States aviation forces in Europe with headquarters in Paris. Later he was attached to the American Peace Commission headed by Col. E. M. House.

For his war services he was decorated with the French Legion of Honor and Belgian Order of Leopold II. Prior to the war he served with the Hawaiian diplomatic corps, beginning in 1882 as secretary to the Hawaiian Legation. In late years he represented the United States in Pan American and Pan European economic conferences.

Upturn Hinges On Accord, Says RFC Chairman

Government and Business Should Work Together, Jones Declares.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 3.—Intelligent, cordial, friendly and determined co-operation between Government and business was presented tonight by Jesse H. Jones, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, as the key to economic betterment.

Addressing a dinner meeting of the New York Southern Society, Jones said there unquestionably was a "very marked" slowing up in all business activity, but added:

"Notwithstanding the realities of these recessions, or the fears that have been multiplying in the minds of many people, we have not reached the stages of a depression."

Professing inability to understand cause of these fears, he mentioned "fear of Government" as the most frequently heard reason.

"But," he said, "that is not a good reason . . . Too many of us feel that Government supervision is Government interference." Jones said it was the Government's "responsibility" to see to it that business "plays the game squarely, and does not charge too much for its service."

The budget can be balanced by the next fiscal year, Jones said, only "if we can get business started again and people back to work. The budget never can be balanced definitely until business and Government come to a better understanding."

Jones said revision of the tax laws was "assumed within a very few months." He called the undistributed surplus tax good in "principle" but said as now written "it works a hardship on the great majority of corporations."

Bob Burns Says—

There use'ta be a saying that "you can take the boy out of the country, but you can't take the country out of the boy," but that ain't true anymore. It's so easy to travel now that the line between the city and the country ain't no hurdle at all.

Not long ago, Grandpa Snazzy came back from a trip to the city and I says "I bet you felt mighty strange and out of place up there." Grandpa says "No, I didn't—I wasn't there more than a week when I fell right into their ways. He said "Why, I got so I could keep my seat in the street car with a lady standin' in front of me and I didn't feel a bit self-conscious."

U.S. Hints It Might Grind Dam Cement

By the Associated Press.

Counsel for the Federal Trade Commission called yesterday in an effort to show that a sharp decrease in cement quotations followed discussion of the possibility the Government might grind its own cement for the Grand Coulee dam project in the Far West.

F. I. Taylor, assistant chief engineer of the Bureau of Reclamation, testified cement manufacturers submitted bids of $1.92 a barrel for 700,000 barrels after the Government had rejected identical bids of $2.67 a barrel.

Walter B. Wooden, commission attorney, asked Taylor if this did not follow talk that the Government might grind its own cement. John W. Norwood,

Gambling Raid Nets Nine Here; One Held

A gambling raid yesterday netted District policement nine prisoners, oneof whom was held by United States Commissioner Needham C. Turnage for $1,500 bond on a charge of operating a lottery.

The raid, led by Detectives Ted Howell and Robert F. Eagen, was made on a pool room in the 800 block of Fourth street northwest. Eight other prisoners were released after being questioned.

Cabs 'Corner' Rich Marriage Trade in Md. 'Gretna Green'

Elkton, Md., Dec. 3 (AP).—Cab drivers have virtually cornered the rich "marriage trade" in the Gretna Green.

A new town ordinance requires a $100 permit for solicitors of altar-bound couples. Twelve licenses have been issued, ten of them to drivers for a single cab company which employs two ministers on a salary basis.

The other two licenses have gone to associates of a rival nuptial syndicate, headed by a retired minister.

The ordinance gives the town government a share of the wedding income. Comparative figures show size of the business: population of Elkton, 3,331; number of marriage licenses issued last year, 11,512.
